>> ☐ QB Heavy Industry's Stance on freelancers Anonymous 07/20/12(Fri)14:05 No.19966896

As a whole, QB Heavy Industries prefers to groom its talents. Taking the down and out, cast away dregs of society, it turns them into capable bodyguards, spies, assassins and the like. Usually these are desperate, sometimes broken preteen or teenaged girls with nothing to lose. Most of them are usually on their deathbeds.

However, the company has been known to put out contracts in the open market for mercenaries and private military companies to take. Said cases are either surplus to the company's needs or require specialized talents and/or connections. Such as cybercrime and corporate espionage, for example. The company's field agents may be competent, but most of them lack certain skills necessary for certain areas of work.

Mercenaries who take on such jobs are usually referred to as "freebooters". It is a strange term to call a merc, but the pay is usually good... assuming you live to collect the check.

A very tenacious mercenary who manages to distinguish himself or herself to the corporation is designated as a "Rogue Trader". A merc with this designation is usually given a first pick of missions. Depending on the merc's skillset, he may even get a crack at jobs usually reserved for field agents or even the occasional teaching spot.

Then again, to get there, one has to be really good at what he does. Or be extremely well-connected.

You are a Magical Girl, but you're not feeling too damn magical at the moment.

You know damn well what a Magical Girl is supposed to be. They're supposed to be the protectors of hopes and dreams, arriving in a blast of shimmering lights with rainbows exploding out of their asses. Wearing costumes with bright primary colors and just short enough to skirt the line of decency in order to attract both their key demographics - those barely old enough to smoke, and those nearly old enough to be wizards.

[2/3]

What Magical Girls are not supposed to be is alcoholic. Or popping handfuls of painkillers just to calm themselves down enough for the next swig of whisky. They're not supposed to be barging into their place of work at two in the morning, clutching a paper bag full of two bottles of whiskey and a bottle of green-tinted melon liqueur. In a maid outfit with the front of it nearly dark red in dried, crusting blood. Scaring all the night guards and graveyard shifters by stalking through the office without so much as a word or a nod of greeting.

Proper Magical Girls - the sort that have natural, luxurious blonde curls in their hair, have a bra size to be proud of to look in the mirror, perfect milky skin, the scent of pancakes permeating her warmth - would never walk out on their boss with the express aim to get themselves drunk in the company of a girl they themselves dismembered.

You step into Midori's Silent Room, and it's then that you feel the chill of the Anti-Magic Barrier set in despite the thick layers of clothing you've been walking in for a while. The Shield on your right arm winks out with a grind of crunching gears and a flicker of purple light, leaving your own Soul Gem crackling in your hand for a moment, just before it changes into the silver band on your ring finger.

You nod at the Magical Girl on guard tonight, and she closes the door behind you, the pressure seals hissing as the three-inch thick door slides into position. You kick off your heels, letting your tired feet rest - and it's then that you place the paper bag down on the floor, before you walk up to Midori's gurney.

She's still comatose. Sleeping, even though by all right she should be legally dead. You have her soul, after all, clutched in your left hand - a crimson Soul Gem, gilded with silver and brass. You've asked Mami to pay her visits every other day or so - just to rouse her from oblivion periodically. It would have been cruel to simply leave her, asleep, the entire week you were gone.

Her clothes seem to have been freshly changed. She's now wearing just a simple, thin white gown, the sort people in hospitals are made to wear and nothing else. She's sufficiently restrained, black straps binding her to the gurney but even you yourself know she doesn't have a hope of doing anything rash, not without you in the room. It's overkill, even with her still legless.

[]Wake her up.
[]Do something perverted to the unconscious, legless girl on the gurney

You briefly think about taking advantage of the situation. This is the Silent Room after all, isn't it? Nothing that happens inside is ever seen - or heard - outside. It's not like anyone would mind, either - as far as anyone else is concerned, Midori is baggage, something to get rid of. They're actually surprised you haven't taken care of her, yet. So what's a few moments of indulging yourself? She probably won't mind.

You look down at Midori's helpless form, before chuckling and unfolding the metal chair leaning beside the gurney - slightly amused, and at the same time, slightly disturbed at yourself.

You set the bag of alcohol beside you just as you sit down on the chair. Taking out the two bottles of Kong Whiskey that you'd bought, on tab, from Charles, as well as the fancy green shit he gave you as a freebie. The bottles you place on the floor beside you, along with the two glasses you've also borrowed.

Flexing your right hand, you force your Soul Gem to manifest in its jewel form. It does so with a hesitant snap of electricity, and it's then that you tap Midori's crimson one against it.

Immediately, the girl on the gurney gasps as she is returned - harshly - back into her body. Breathing deep into lungs that had been empty moments before. The painful sting of life coursing through her, inert organs working once more, a heart ticking again.

You've experienced that far too many times, you remember. It's not a nice experience. Not to mention the disorientation, that destabilizing sensation of displacement, of being alive when you're supposed to be dead.

"W-where...where am I? Murder...Murderface? Is that you?"

You bid her good morning as you place your Soul Gems, in a glass each, and start pouring. Whisky for you, and that weird green shit for her.

"What...what are you wearing?" Midori's voice is dry and strained, but you could hear the smile in her words. "Is that...a maid costume?"

How do you respond?

It's been implied that Kyubey is interested in her abilities, and that she has no particular loyalty towards her own

Incubator. We should test her character and see if we can turn her to our side. She would definitely be a useful friend to have.

On the other hand, she got an idol raped and killed and nearly did the same to our principal, simply because she's been paid to do so. We should teach her that this kind of things is not acceptable if we're going to work together.

IIRC, the first Otaku attack didn't have Magical Girl support. They recruited her for the 2nd because security increased after the 1st video went all over the internet.

Also Midori/Emi really cares about her parents - as long as QB can keep his eye on them, she won't make any trouble.

"None...none taken." Midori manages to say, coughing for a few moments, before heaving a sigh. "I know what I did, and...and I think I'm in the situation where apologies aren't going to help anymore." She struggles slightly, feebly, in her restraints. "One thing's for sure, though - I never thought I'd get used to not having legs. It's crazy."

She turns to look at you and smiles. "And yeah, I got that. Escort missions rarely go smoothly. After all, if it was going to be all peaches and cream, why'd you get hired in the first place?" Midori giggles slightly. "The blood's a bit much, but it sorta fits. Murderface Murdermaid, for all your murdering needs!"

You nod as you take your own glass, full of amber liquid, your own purple soul gem clinking gently against the glass as you swirl the contents. That's pretty funny, you say. You'll consider it as a fallback in case you become a free agent.

It's then that Midori smacks her lips, blinking.

"W-wait. I can taste...something. In my mouth. Vodka? Is that vodka? And...and melon? Are you dunking my soul gem in melon liqueur, Murderface...?"

Clever girl. You say yes as you take a sip from your own glass, draining half of its contents.

Midori's eyes widen at this, and gasp as you pick up her glass and give it a small shake.

"I-it's...it's warm. I..." She blinks at you, her cheeks reddening, an uncertain smile on her face. "Murderface, are you trying to get me drunk...?"

How do you respond?

Ok you massive faggot I am not the guy who was asking I have actually been here since the first thread and you are obviously a useless cunt who came in halfway and thinks they are king dick of tg.

Here's a hint, you aren't. You are a massive waste of space raging at someone calling you out for being a dick, you probably are the type of person who cannot even speak to someone when you aren't behind a computer screen let alone abuse them because your combination of terrible social skills, superiority complex and smelling like the pile of shit you are means you try to act big and get things your way on the Internet to make you feel better.

Your opinion is no more important than anyone else's in here and your actions are making them less important

Midori's face reddens even further at this. "W-well, the...the not getting drunk alone, I understand. I'm actually flattered, to tell you the truth. Maybe even the bit about you wanting to...to lick my soul gem, whatever that's going to do." You hear her words tremble slightly as if in anticipation. "B-but what did you see that's so bad that you need two bottles of whiskey to wash it out?" She looks at you, seemingly concerned. "Do...do you really hate being a Magical Girl that much, Murderface?"

You don't look at her as you slouch back in your seat, stretching your legs out in front of you. It's a pertinent question, of course, one that needs answering.

"Is...is it about the girl in the pink dress? The one with the black eyes?" Midori ventures. "I saw her, you know. Back at the penthouse. I had you dead to rights. I was proud of how I managed to make it indistinguishable from reality. Even if you found out, you wouldn't have woken up long after we were gone." It's then that she shakes her head. "But she suddenly popped in, out of nowhere...a-and told me that I had to let you go. Or she would eat my soul."

She swallows at the memory. "I...I thought she was just bluffing, but...she just touched me on the forehead, and she broke my illusion. Just like that. No one has ever done that." Midori shakes her head. "Who is she, Murderface? Why are you so important to her?"

And quest threads are far different than a d&d game because it is many people controlling one character, in the case you said then it is unacceptable to join a game without knowing what is happening, in a quest it is quite common for people to drop in and out just quite often they don't mention it and no one noticed

Anyway I am not responding to any more of this and derailing this any longer.

"Very astute questions, Callidus." A familiar voice cuts into your conversation, and you turn slightly to glance at the white furry form of Kyuubey, the door to the Silent Room closing shut behind it. "Questions that I doubt Matsuda here would be able to answer, although she's more than welcome to try."

You frown at the mutant cat before refilling your drink. "Minase Iori called a total of thirty-one times, Matsuda." Kyuubey says after a moment. "She was asking if you were alright. She was in tears in all twenty-nine previous calls, and hysterical for the last two. I tried to respond, but she hung up every time. I thought you should be the one to tell her."

Right now, you just want to try and get yourself together. Try and make yourself feel like yourself, again.

You drain your glass, refill it, drain it again, and then refill it a bit more than before.

"That's fine. Take as long as you want to recuperate." Kyuubey nods as he watches you give your liver another undeserved beating. "We'll skip your debriefing for now, I think I can reasonably infer just what happened."

Then why the hell is he harshing on your buzz, then?

"Because we may have discovered how to combat the effects of the Golden Weapons." The Incubator replies. "A mere possibility, of course - but with the readings you've supplied me, it gives it a 50% chance of working."

You finally look at Kyuubey. He has your attention now, and a quick glance at Midori tells you that she's listening too, although with a slightly confused expression on her face. Trying to understand.

Kyuubey seems to have caught Midori's expression as well, and coughs slightly. "But you will have to visit our Research and Development branch in Siberia for that. Transportation will be provided, I have sent word for your arrival in a day's time. You can take it as a sabbatical if you want - I hear it's good hunting for bears, there."

You'll...you'll keep that in mind.

"Well, that's all I wanted to tell you. No doubt you'd want to get on with your festivities." It's then that he turns to leave, but then moves toward the glass of green liquid with a crimson Soul Gem floating in it.

"Ah. While we're here. I found that I can easily brute-force the change of contract. It only takes a few moments." Kyuubey places a paw on the lip of the glass. "Of course, I can just as easily nullify the contract, here and now, and we'd have one less loose end to deal with."

"...Wait." Midori blinks at this. "M-My...my what? Contract? Murderface, that's...that's my Soul Gem. What's he going to do with it?"

"Her parents will be well-provided for and I will expend the resources to protect them no matter your decision, but if you decide to have her be a member of this Officio, she will be your responsibility. I don't think I have to remind you just how much of a risk it is." Its paw touches the top of the Soul Gem. "If not, then consider this a special favor. It will be relatively painless."

Downside to this is that Sayaka will definitely be there and she'll be pissed that we got her girlfriend's back snapped in half. Visiting Kyouko would definitely lead to violence and drama and sour Kyouko's mood (like last time Sayaka was a bitch).

Mami is our shining beacon of hope because she's fucked up too, just in a different way, so she can help us. So far she has been safer around us in situations that our presence or absence would have an effect.

You look over at Midori. She's looking at you, fearful, her eyes wide, lower lip trembling. Despite the fact that her Soul Gem had been swimming around in melon liqueur, she's as sober as sober can be. Not that you blame her, of course - being behind enemy lines, cooped up in a room for more than a week, just waiting for the other shoe to drop. She'd probably made her peace with dying, but when the moment's all but mere inches away, no one can help but hope for salvation.

You wonder if you'll ever have someone to do the same for you, someday.

You turn toward Kyuubey and murmur your answer, and he nods after a moment.

"As long as you understand the ramifications, then, Matsuda. Give me your Soul Gem."

You place your glass on the floor and nudge it toward him. Kyuubey blinks at how it's currently swimming in whiskey, before placing a paw on the jewel itself. The Soul Gem glows with an inner light, a glow that slowly comes away from the bauble and floats above the glass. This mote of light, Kyuubey captures with a prehensile ear, pushing it into the other glass where Midori's Soul Gem is stored.

The mote of light floats right into the crimson gem, making it glow - and you hear Midori whimper as the light fades out.

"Done. Her wish remains intact, but for all intents and purposes, she is now one of this Officio, Callidus Rank. I've attuned her Soul Gem to yours. With this, you will be able to track where she is, and if you so choose, take control of her. You can even kill her remotely should you find her usefulness has ended."

"M-Murderface..." Midori whispers, half in relief, half in confusion. "W-why did you...?"

Kyuubey notices this. "Yes, well, Matsuda does things nowadays that surprise even me. In any case, welcome to this Officio Assassinorum, Hanegawa Midori. Try not to give Matsuda reason to kill you."

A flash of light and it's then that Kyuubey pushes a smartphone - your smartphone - towards you. "And here. I think you'll need this. Don't give Minase Iori a reason to kill you, either."

You take the smartphone, frowning at the Incubator as it walks away, leaving you and Midori alone.

"S-so...so what happens now?" Midori says awkwardly, after a moment. "I mean, I'm...I'm grateful and everything, and I know I've been asking too many questions. But why go through all this trouble?" She seems to be puzzled. "I'm part - well, was part - of another agency. It's..." Her expression turns sly. "...you like me, don't you, Murderface?" She blushes, grinning. "I...I'm not so sure what to say..."

We had a Kaname Madoka on the first phones contact list as well as a contact labeled ???. We have the disturbingly clear memory of shooting Faust, Madoka with black eyes, in the head as she ripped our heart out. Also, we briefly saw a picture of Madoka in Kyubeys office.

Whether she's alive or dead, we haven't found out.

Also, stuff that Kyubey was supposed to be doing for us:
1) Finding out who sent the Witch from thread1 to Mami's apartment.
2) Assigning us a new apartment.
3) Finding out who Akemi Homura is.

Haven't gotten back to any of those.

"You like me," Midori giggles, clearly not hearing a word you'd just said. "You...you do, don't you? Oh...oh my. Murderface likes me. I don't know what to say, I don't..." She fidgets on her bed, struggling slightly against her restraints. "...I should tell my m-my mom about this, b-but...I don't have a phone..."

You let out a sigh as you drain your glass, again, before picking up your smartphone and dialing Iori's number. She picks up even before the first ring's finished, and you could hear sniffling in the background.

"Y-yes?" Iori's voice comes over, stuttering in between sobs, clearly breaking down. "C-Chiaki-san, is this you? Please, please tell me this is you, please tell me you're safe..."

You only wanted to get drunk quietly somewhere private. You're not cut out for this.

"I'm okay, Iori. I'm fine. I'm at the office, just...just trying to take care of something."

Silence, at the other end.

"Really...? You're alright?" Iori whispers, before sobbing all over again. "I'm...I'm glad. Thank..thank you for saving me again, Chiaki-san. A-and Takane-chan, and Chihaya-chan, too. Thank you s-so much." She's crying, again, and you hear what sounds like Garcia trying to calm her down.

No you don't.

Don't get me wrong, I'm not being accusing. I understand. It hurt the first, second, maybe even third time.

But then, you got used to it. You didn't get attached to the characters, knowing you would simply fail. When you got another ending, you began to find it funny. The more you would get it, the less you would try.

But have faith. We are with you. We share the goal you are trying to tell yourself you don't want. With us, you can do it. But to do it, we need you. We can get that good ending together. Isn't that worthwhile?

As a result the time travel got messed up, leaving us without any memories and Faust without a physical body (if the body was physical in the first place)

Your Soul Gem sparks slightly in its whiskey bath.

"Garcia is with you?" You manage to ask.

Iori takes a few seconds before she could reply.

"Y-yes, Garcia-san...I'm at his mansion for the moment. Fabiola's with me, along with a few girls from Kyuubey-san's agency. We're staying here for the night until they...they say it's safe." A giggle. "We had to stop by the hospital to get Garcia-san checked, though. He accidentally shot himself a few times with the tranquilizer gun you gave him. He was trying to protect me."

That's...sweet, you say. That's good. She should stay there and get some rest.

"Murderface, i-if it's okay, could you...could you get these off?" Midori suddenly asks, wiggling her arms in their restraints. "I can't move very well with them on. I should be able to give my new boss a hug at least, right?" She giggles, again, loud enough for her voice to carry to your call.

Yep. She's drunk.

"Chiaki-san? What was that?"

You immediately pluck Midori's Soul Gem from the glass full of liqueur. Nothing, you say to Iori. Absolutely nothing.

"Really? B-because, I thought I heard--"

Midori giggles again, and it's then that you stop her - or at least attempt to - by giving her soul gem a quick lick. Tasting the melon liqueur coating it.

The sharp, surprised moan coming from Midori is loud enough to drown out even your own words.

"Chiaki-san? What's going on? Chiaki-san...?"

You hastily tell her that you'll meet her at your apartment tomorrow morning and say goodbye. You end the call, and then drop Midori's Soul Gem back into the glass before burying your face in your palm.

This was going as well as you expected it to go. Which is not well at all.

What do you do now? You have the rest of the night to yourself. And your new personal Callidus.

Have we figured out why Sayaka hates us so much? I remember her various attempts at killing Chiaki, but never a good, soild reason behind it. It's not like we're actively trying to steal Kyoko from her, or trying to kill Kyoko or Sayaka on purpose or anything. Or is this a 'Watch Madoka' thing? I honestly don't know.

If you're familiar with Madoka Magica, Sayaka and Homura never got along because of Homura's callous attitude.

From what I've gleaned of the quest so far, it seems mostly to be the fact that Murderface got famous fast, despite being an amnesiac magical girl rescued from a witches barrier, and Mami likes us and gives us the time of day despite being an alcoholic, chainsmoking, emotionally crippled wreck. So, Sayaka takes it personally cause she admires Mami and thinks Chiaki isn't worth the trouble.

See, we don't love her in any way but we pity her. She found out her best friend who had been raped committed suicide, she herself was nearly raped and was only saved due to us and now she has equated us with safety. The Kilgore scenario only reinforces this and makes her even more unstable because she has almost definitely lost friends which will cause her to be even more reclusive and rely on us and our little circle of magical girls because it is safe and they care for her.

Quite frankly she isn't getting over possessive of us, she is just terrified that she is going to lose the one thing that she believes will be constant which is us

What just boggles my mind to no end is:

Why do you people always insist on draggig Iori further into this is. I mean, it doesn`t take a fucking genius to figure out how far off the Pants-on-Head-Retarded-Scale that Idea is. There is this somewhat normal girl leading a somewhat normal life and instead of giving her the fucking boot out of our fucked up mahou shoujo life - because that`s the most reasonable thing to do - we let her get atached to us even more by caring or at least showing that we somehow care about her.

There is no fucking way this will end well if we keep her around us.

Also why the heck Iori when we have Mami for all that feely -mushy stuff and she is a whole lotta better than Iori because even if she tends to be the motherfucking blond-haired curvy avatar of Mother Theresa at least she knows the shit we go through and how to handle us.

What I`m trying to say is: Keep the normal girl out of our supernatural world and if you want to go lez-yay go for another magical girl. Especially a voluptuous one with blond curls.

Well, we could push her away, but that runs the risk of her going the same way as her friend Yayoi. you know, with the suicide and such. She's looking for something that can be an anchor in her life, and since most of her friends, acquaintances, and co-workers were just killed a few hours ago, she's going to need anything she can latch on to, even if temporarily.

Also, as sad as it is, us not being with her will probably get her killed faster, than being with us. Sure, this being a noir setting, getting close to us greatly increases her chances of dying, but she would have had it worse if we weren't there with her.

I agree with this guy. Being around Chiaki has actually saved Iori twice now, so it's probably better to stick around and keep an eye on her. Sure, it's dangerous, but we can keep her somewhat safe. At least safer than if she had relied on regular security at the hotel or gone to the mansion without Chiaki.

However, if our problems start to affect Iori, it might be time to cut her loose for her own safety. That is to say, maybe a magical girl from some rival agency trying to make a quick name for herself by taking out Murderface? Yakuza's out for payback for blowing up one of their joints or Oriko trying to get revenge for Kirika - these are all Chiaki's personal problems, and if/when they end up endangering Iori, then it would probably be better to tell her to take a hike for her own safety.

She's also associated willingly with us after our first protection job. Even if we do successfully let her down, it is likely that anyone who is looking to exploit connections to us will go after her. It's not likely that any amount of professional guards (aside from other magical girls, perhaps) could protect her in such an event, sadly.

It seems that she's in Chiaki's life now for better or worse. Still, we should look into having her assert her own independence rather than leaning on Chiaki all the time.

>Or are there more of those creeps out there?
I would say very much yes, considering what was said about the traffic on the pay site that hosted the Yayoi videos.
Also this is apparently a setting where a group of otaku can get their hands on AK-47's in Japan of all places, and hire magical support.
Sure, the original group is dead, but you don't know if it had more members who may try again, or another group may come together to try their own hand at it.

Thankyou for sharing your opinions and insite on this matter. I appreciate it immensely. I'm usually descent at remembering character motivations and plot points when reading books, but I have found it to be slightly more difficult to do with quest threads due to the various "lol / randumb / drama / argument / good idea / rebuttal / better idea / i r support dis" pists inbetween said character and plot points. I have managed to retain the general gist and throughly enjoy this quest.

Of course, being at work and posting / reading on my phone is distracting in another way entirely on top of it all. Oh well.

Thanks again!

That's a shame. Madoka's actually pretty good, so far as anime goes. Obviously, it's not for everyone, but I'd say the appeal is broad enough that a variety of people might find themselves unexpectedly enjoying it. I know I personally went from skeptic to entertained once the first three episodes had run their course.

Well, Deculture isn't really changing their personalities or character at all. Sure, some motivations and backgrounds are markedly different, but all the characters feel authentic, except for Chiaki who's obviously something completely new.

Though I have to say, from the sound of it, you might have trouble struggling through the first two episodes which were very much a classical anime set-up until things started to change with episode 3 and 4.

Then again, there's been so many spoilers thrown out in the quest threads that a lot of the entertainment value of Madoka is probably all gone for a new watcher by now.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 07/25/12(Wed)08:24 No.20031398

You are a Magical Girl, and in trying to do your level best to make sure your liver is a twisted wreck of its former self by the time you get to twenty, you've apparently given your newly-minted subordinate her jollies. Toe-curling, cheek-flushing, eyes rolling up the back of her head kind of jollies.

You don't know if she's just extraordinarily sensitive, or it does have that kind of effect, but she's shaken enough that the metal buckle of one of the straps holding her done had simply given up, bending permanently out of shape.

That'll teach you to do funny things to other girls' Soul Gems.

Honestly, what were you even thinking?

It's late. By your estimate, it's probably one, two in the morning. You've just come back from an assignment that had you going to one of those events rich people spend all their time talking about and spending atrocious amounts of money organizing - and in a maid outfit, no less. A maid outfit that's nearly completely all red - except for the black parts, anyway - because the people that have been doing their level best to kill you back there had the sheer audacity to bleed on you as they died.

Now you're here, back in the office. Boozing it up, just like after every assignment you've been on. Only this time, you're drinking with the Officio's latest recruit - a Callidus, by the name of Hanegawa Midori. She still doesn't have her legs back from that time where you shot them off of her. If she had them right now, though, they'd probably be twitching right now. Or...something.

It takes a disturbingly long while for Midori to settle down after her orgasm, and she murmurs your name as she closes her eyes, a small contented smile on her face.

You look at her, and then at the green liquid you've let her Soul Gem soak in. You pick up the glass and give its contents a sniff.

This must be some really good shit. Too bad you're not really into the whole mixed drinks scene.

You put it back down on the floor and refill your glass.

What do you do?

[]Call Iori back. You got some 'splainin' to do.
[]Wake up Midori and ask her about what she's capable of. The night is still young.
[]Call Misaka and thank her for Tiny Pete.

You tap out Iori's number on your smartphone's screen just as you slowly sip at your glass. While you're not exactly that worried, you feel that another call, just to clear things up, is prudent.

While you're sure you're not deluding yourself, you've seen (and heard) enough of Kyoko's and Sayaka's monthly spats to understand that certain things should be explained properly, and with better care. To avoid misunderstandings.

Iori herself picks up after the third ring. She seems to have calmed down after your call - in fact, she's a bit too calm. A bit cold.

"Matsuda-san?" She says your adopted last name icily, and you blink at this. It's...this is strange, but at least she's coherent now, right? "What are you calling for at this hour? We did agree that we'll be meeting tomorrow morning, didn't we? Which, if you'll notice, will be a few hours later."

It takes you a moment to get your jaw working again. You stutter a bit, actually saying sorry that you'd disturbed her this late at night, and that you just wanted to explain what the noise was, earlier--

"I'm sure it wasn't any of my business, Matsuda-san. I'm already satisfied with knowing that you're more or less intact. Physically." Her words are clipped and precise, reminding you of the Iori you'd first met back at the Hotel Penthouse. "If there's nothing else, then please let me sleep."

Well, there's nothing else, you say. But just as you start to say goodbye, she ends the call.

You glance down at your smartphone screen, where Iori and Mami, photographed there, smile up at you.

That went...not as well as you would have hoped, but at least she's alright for now. You're not that worried for her security, either - with Fabiola and three Eversors in the same house as the idol, not even Kirika would have dared.

With that off your shoulders, you take another sip from your glass as you scroll through your contacts. Everyone you know is listed, of course, which makes it just a bit more pitiful, as you could count the entries with both hands and still have plenty of fingers left over.

Barring two that you absolutely have no idea who, of course. The first being [Kaname Madoka], the other [???].

That's strange. You remember seeing them in your old cellphone - the one that Kirika had done away with - but you don't remember putting these in. This isn't even the same sim card.

Best case scenario: We are pushing the girl right into Garcia's arms and they'll live happily ever after in huge mansion somewhere in South America.
But I think we are rather setting for the first option - she would be more likely to turn MG is she cared for our dunkard of a protagonist than is she despises her.

I sure her reaction is a sign of her realizing how ridiculous her obsession with Chiaki was and realizing that she has to move forward. Although I get the nagging feeling that his is just a knee-jerk reaction and that there'll be something working its way down the pipes later on. Either way, this is going to be a very awkward month or so while we guard her. Unless she decides to end the protection work early and move to another compound, that is.

You try to remember who Kaname Madoka is as you select her name from your contacts list, your thumb hovering above on the Call button. You're...you're pretty sure you haven't met anyone with that name. You can't even put a face to the name itself, at that. Probably one of the newbies you've had the passing opportunity of training? A Principal from a past assignment that you wanted to try and keep in touch with?

Well, you'll figure things out. You tap the call button and hold the device up to your ear, but not before draining your glass, first. Your Soul Gem clinking against the now-empty crystal.

The call doesn't connect at all. You hear a prerecorded spiel - something about the dialed number either being out of coverage area, or that the number itself hasn't been activated yet.

That was a waste of time, but you're...somehow relieved, and at the same time slightly disturbed. You decide to call the number sometime in the future, just to see if who answers.

A notification pops up on your phone as you end the call. One that announces that your Diary app has once more been unlocked for use.

Beside you, Midori is sleeping rather fitfully. Probably the first time in a long while she's sleeping in her own body, rather than in a little bauble the size of a small egg. You don't exactly blame her - the gurney's actually pretty comfortable when you get down to it. The straps can be a bit much, but if you're into that, no one's judging you.

What do you do?

You tap at your Diary app's icon. It takes a moment to fully load, and when it does, you get another notification: that being you can unlock one diary entry at this particular point of time.

For a diary app, this isn't really so much as a diary as it is some sort of demented application for people who constantly forget things, like you do. Why couldn't you have used something less temperamental? Like notepad or something?

You take a moment to refill your glass as you think up of a suitable five-letter word to try.

The word pops up quite easily, and you immediately type it in before you lose your nerve. The smiling face of a pink-haired girl with the black eyes rising like an unbidden thought, a memory forcibly buried under but still refusing to die.

Pinky's real name.

[To call Faust a Witch in any sense of the term is laughable, and speaks of complete and despicable ignorance. She is not simply a Witch, not anymore, she has become a concept, something permanent, something that cannot be destroyed. Well, theoretically, in a way, she can be destroyed - but it'll take an awful lot more than that.]

[Faust is my fault. Faust, therefore, is my responsibility. I can only hope that the world, in time, will forgive me for what I have done and what I am about to do.]

As soon as you've scrolled down to the last sentence of the diary, another dialog opens.

[3 OUT OF 10 ENTRIES UNLOCKED. PROGRAM LOCKING TEMPORARILY.]

The app closes and disables itself yet again, the icon greyed out. You're temporarily gripped with the notion of smashing your smartphone against the wall, but you don't. No need to take it out on the damn thing. Besides, it's new, it lets you make calls, and has an app that lets you take pictures of girls through their clothes.

No, of course you don't. That's a scam. You wonder who would ever fall for that.

You decide to finally stop fooling around with your smartphone, and get to getting shit done, so to speak. Placing your smartphone back into your inventory, you open the the Silent Room's door a small bit and call out for the guard, who sleepily acknowledges your presence. You tell her to fetch a wheelchair from sick bay, which she gladly obeys. While you wait, you walk over to Midori's gurney and start undoing the straps, one by one.

Some of the straps have been cinched up pretty tight, and it takes you a while to unbuckle them all. Surprisingly you're not fumbling all that much, considering you're well on your way to being sauced as fuck.

It takes a moment for you to finally free Midori from her bonds, and you spend that moment rousing her from sleep.

"Nngh...? Murder...face?" Her eyes fluttering open, Midori looks at you with a rather dazed expression, her cheeks still crimson. "What...what just happened? I...I remember feeling really good, a-and then just passing out..."

You momentarily glance downward at the two glasses of alcohol on the floor beside your chair - both your and Midori's soul gems marinating in their drink of choice, so to speak - and it's then that you look back up at the legless girl and tell her the truth of the matter. As tastefully and as eloquently as you can.

"I gave you an orgasm by licking your Soul Gem. It seemed like a good idea at the time."

Which is to say, not at all.

Midori is silent for a few minutes, before her cheeks redden completely.

"What? You did that? You can do that?" She's embarrassed, and rightfully so - you don't really let just anyone see you like that, all vulnerable and open in that manner. "B-but...but why?" And then, in a smaller whisper: "C-can you do it again? Just...just once more? Please?"

From shock to incredulous to needy in five seconds flat.

You hang out with the strangest of people.

You are silent for a moment before you deny her request, netting for yourself a disappointed groan and a pout. You are rescued, thankfully, by the guard from earlier, as she comes in with the wheelchair you requested. It's one of those folding stainless numbers, sturdy enough and not at all that bad to get around with if you got yourself so horribly damaged that maintaining a vertical base is not so much a chore but an actual impossible thing to do, and that you have better things to focus on at the moment, like breathing.

You scoop up Midori into your arms, and she gasps in surprise as she throws her arms around you. Suddenly fearful of the sudden loss of the bed that had been...well, her world ever since you blew her legs off.

She's lighter than you think. Probably because she's missing a substantial amount of her lower body, but still.

Midori shivers in your embrace again, and it's then that you lower her onto the wheelchair. She lets go of you as soon as she manages to sit herself, her arms gripping the handrests. You take this moment to collect both your Soul Gems - yours flickering back into its ring form, around your ring finger, and hers ending up in your Inventory. Just in case.

The guard seems to be all but ready to fall asleep, and you dismiss her with a nod, saying that you'll take care of things for now. You take the bottle of whiskey that you've been killing and finally finish it off, knocking the entire thing back, letting the amber liquid light a fire in your belly. Placing it back down, you pick up the unopened one.

Kyoko would appreciate it, at least, if Sayaka wouldn't.

"Where are we going, Murderface?" Midori finally asks as you wheel her out of the Silent Room - her thinly-dressed form shivering again as the both of you step out of the limits of the Anti-Magic Field, warmth seeping back slowly into your bodies.

Not sure if it's a good idea to leave Iori behind. I know you folks don't seem to like her much, but we ARE still trying to keep her away from QB at least, right? I'm sure nothing could possibly go wrong if we left her behind and took everyone who has shown the least amount concern with us. /sarcasm

That said, we really need to establish waifus here. Flirting with every girl we meet will only lead to trouble, though I'm not naive enough to think that anyone who frequents /tg/ would be able to resist the Fluffy Bottom if dangled in front of us...

This means we care more about Mami (because she's our pancake cook), and Midori (because she tastes good), but we don't have any romantic feelings for any of those. It's more about base needs.
Kyouko is our girlbro. Misaka fixes stuff for us and is a little sister figure. Iori is a case for the psychiatrist, but we have that gut feeling she'll die if we push her away, and we're working for her anyway.

NOT MAGICAL GIRL NOIR QUEST BUT STILL

You've pretty much inspired me, Deculture. I'm currently working on a series of flash animations set in the Megucaverse.

A hardboiled no-nonsense investigator is hired to check out a series of mysterious disappearances of young girls in the planned city of Mitakihara. He suspects sexual deviants, human trading, sick murderers. He won't be prepared for what he finds. Private Eye monologuing everywhere, cigarettes, hard booze, hard truths.

We're about to make it happen as a flash animation in the style of something like this http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=DXDX32Vy5H8. All black/white, with some colors added in like in Sin City. Interested?

You close your eyes briefly as you enjoy the pleasant buzz that drinking an entire bottle of whiskey had so generously blessed you with. You should probably savor it while you have the chance. Still, you might as well start finding out more about Midori - otherwise it's just going to be a long and awkward walk to the Infirmary Floor.

You break the silence by asking her about what she can do. It's not often you actually encounter a Callidus - it's usually just Eversors or Vindicares, really. Culexus even more so - in fact, you haven't seen one since...ever. Well, there was that one time, but--

"W-well, I..." Midori seems to take a moment to gather her thoughts. "Heh. I'm really not supposed to tell people what I can do, it's not something Callidus usually do on a whim, but...you're my boss now, right? So I should." She clears her throat. "Like...like what you're already familiar with, I can take on the guise of someone. Anyone, so long as I can study them long enough and see how they are. That's Easy Mode."

Midori lets out a sigh. "I didn't use that on you - I used Nightmare Mode, which is something I like to call a wide-area hypnosis kind of deal. I can project an invisible barrier that influences how the people inside that barrier perceive who I am, and...well, what they expect me to be, I become that, in their eyes. The barrier feeds upon their expectations of who I'm supposed to be at that moment, and then feeds that back into their minds. Their subconscious just fills in the gaps. It's as hard and as taxing as you think, and that's why I only use it when it's really needed."

Seriously? Lets go over the night she's had, and try to puzzle out why she might be mad.

She's currently been shuffled off to a fan boy's house with her two friends, the only two that she can confirm aren't horribly dead after the charnel house that her company party turned into.

She worries half the night about us, calling us over 30 times only to have QB pick up each time. She's been told to never talk to him, and he's not exactly the comforting type to begin with.

Once she finally reaches us, we're drunk and have moans of pleasure interrupting us during our conversation.

I thinking it wasn't the fact that we tried to call her back in the middle of the night that pissed her off. She wasn't getting any sleep tonight anyway, dude.

She coughs. "Or when I realize that someone like THE Murderface is babysitting my mark. I was just planning to use Easy Mode the entire time - I had to initiate Nightmare Mode on top of everything while I was playing around with that idol."

But you weren't all that familiar with Yayoi at the time. How could she have influenced you, someone who has no memory of the fallen idol?

"That's the beauty of it, see?" She smiles as she turns slightly to look at you. "The barrier gets stronger the more people feed it. A lot of people there - including Iori - believed I was Yayoi. All I had to do was feed their perception of me to you. It happens really quickly, and unless you're looking for it specifically, it's not easy to detect." Midori seems proud of herself, before deflating suddenly. "Well, I'd say that, but that girl in the pink dress shattered it so easily..."

Ah. Yes. Pinky. You were just getting to that.

There's not much more, sadly. We're still workan on it, but there's a reason the MC is German. Faust is school material there (and better in German, too). It will explore the trappings and pitfalls of the Puella system while trying to keep it in perspective from a complete outsider who still is sane and not an easy bullshit believer.
What will show up, in no particular order, is:

Envy in huge amounts
Hitomi being a massive bitch
Mental breakdowns
Police crackdowns
Gunfights against Puellas
Backstabbing (literal and metaphorical)
Kindness and care
Magical Gangs
INVESTAGATING

And much more. The original puellas don't play a big role in this because durrfanfiction. The green one is Hitomi though, as you might have noticed.

"Lutsch mir die Eier, du Hurensohn!"

Davon abgesehen, lässt "Tomas" es weder englischer aussehen, noch englischer klingen. Es lässt dich nur wie einen Trottel aussehen der keine Achtung vor der eignen Sprache hat.
Und ja, Namen haben eine korrekte Schreibweise.

Thus, fluffiness level directly equates to power level. Well up to a point, there's that weirdness with losing tails after reaching 9, but I think they they do that just to annoy people who are trying to figure it all out.

You ask her a bit more about Pinky. You've already asked her earlier, of course, but she was well on her way on getting inebriated then. Maybe Midori's sober edition would get you a bit more info on the girl with the sunless eyes who seems to be really focused on bringing her fetishes into this little game of hers. Fetishes that involve impromptu heart surgery with nothing but her bare hands.

"Huh? About her?" Midori asks as the Infirmary finally comes into view after your rounding of a corner - the smell of antiseptic and medicine growing stronger as the office falls away behind you, replaced by the cream-colored tiles and walls of a typical hospital setting.

"Remember how I had Nightmare Mode still activated? I don't know what happened, but...just before she broke my illusion apart, I found myself being changed into you, Murderface. Only..." Her brow furrows. "Different. Like...more stylish. More elegant. You had longer hair, like, down to your ass, and spreading outwards slightly, like wings. You were also wearing this red ribbon on your hair, and then your shield thing, it was on your left arm this time, and it was all gold..."

Huh. That's...right. Exactly what you wanted to know.

As you continue to wheel her forward, it's then that you spot your favorite couple - Sayaka and Kyoko, with the former pushing the latter forward on a wheelchair. Sadly, Kyoko's out of her butler outfit, already in the same gown that Midori is in. Sayaka is in her casual clothes, and clearly fussing over her girlfriend. Kyoko seems to be liking the attention, all smiles, her long unruly red hair falling down her back.

You look back at Sayaka, and for once, you actually feel guilty from the look she's giving you. Of course, you realize that it was Kyoko who made the decision to be your backup, even deigning to do it on her free time - which basically meant she wasn't getting paid for the hours the assignment took up - but you do know that you could have stopped her, at least. Or prevented Kyoko from getting hurt. There's a lot you could have done, even if they couldn't have worked.

You let one of your last remaining friends hurt, is what you're trying to get at here. And no matter the excuse, it's still bad. Period.

You murmur an apology, hoping it sounded sincere enough. Sayaka doesn't so much at blink at you, but instead narrow her eyes, shoulders trembling in barely-kept rage.

"I...I promised Kyoko that I'd count to ten." Sayaka says through gritted teeth, effort clear in her voice, like every word is visibly straining to be spoken. "I am...I am not going to count to goddamn twenty. Your apology is noted, and...and accepted. That's all I'm going to say to you."

That's...surprisingly civil of Sayaka. You honestly thought she'd go out and start shit with you right here in the Infirmary, but she seems to be mellowing somewhat.

Well, that, or Kyoko had made her promise to make nice. And you know yourself that the crimson-haired Eversor had her own set of guiles, even if she herself doesn't know what the hell is a 'guile', besides someone who'd make a family man out of you.

You nod at Sayaka, and turn back to Kyoko, who is smiling up at the blue-haired girl, patting her hand. "Baby steps, Sayaka-chan, baby steps." She faces you after a moment, while Sayaka turns away from you, clearly champing the bit. "So, hey! Kyuubey stopped by while I was getting patched up. We have a new Callidus, it seems! And she's your personal one!" Kyoko's grin is comfortingly smarmy. "You going to capitalize on that 'personal' part, eh, Murderface? Bahahaha!"

You tell her to knock it off, or it's Cripple Jousting Time. You add to the threat by pushing Midori's chair a few inches forward, then back, then forward again. Making its occupant squeak in surprise and treipdation

"HAW! Oh man! Cripple Jousting! LET'S GO! Hey, Sayaka-chan, can you get us some crutches and--" Kyoko is clearly excited at the prospect of taking advantage of her current disability in the most hilarious way ever - until, of course, her enthusiasm is dampened by a withering stare courtesy of Miki Sayaka.

"...Yeah. Let's...not get carried away here, Murderface." Kyoko murmurs after a moment, looking quite like the child who'd been caught with a hand in the cookie jar. "Infirmary and all. Bit of respect for the people worse off than us."

You nod, letting out a small sigh.

"Well, anyway! Who's the Callidus? Dammit, Murderface, introduce us to the newest recruit, at least!" Kyoko smiles at Midori, who seems to have recovered, at least. You manage to nod, and it's then that you begin the introductions - stating both Sayaka's and Kyoko's names in full, along with their Rank. The latter greets Midori with her usual jovial exubrance, while Sayaka only offers her a sneer.

"Oh! Formal an' classy! A keeper, Murderface!" Kyoko crows, all smarmy and such again. You wonder how this girl had just been the one who was crying about how you never recognized her as an actual friend, as she lay there with a broken back. "So, uh, are you gonna be just Murderface's spotter, or are you gonna warm her bed too?"

"SAKURA KYOKO." Both you and Sayaka hiss, in perfect unison, and you both raise your eyebrows at each other. Kyoko is laughing, and laughing hard. The hilarity of this is lost on you, even more so when you hear Midori's reply.

"...If she'll let me."

Oh. What.

Well, I can see this turning out one of two ways.

If Midori is recognized by Iori, play in the Victim complex and claim the Otaku ware forcing her to work for them. Holding family hostage, on threat of death, will rape everything she cares about, etc.

If Iroi had been illusioned to see Midori as Yayoi as well, and continued to do so up until Pinky broke the illusion, it's possible Iori was too focused on the immediate threat, the Otaku Rapists, and too 'Shocked and Awed' afterwards to really register Midori's presence.

Although, considering who we're talking about... Best to prep Option A, have Midori enforce it with an illusion of truthfullness or some such if she can, and pray to go no one else spills the beans before we get Iori out of our lives forever. She's a sweet kid, but staying around us is only going to get her killed horribly, or made into a Magical Girl, and then killed horribly.

She told us this in an anti-magic room. She might be using her powers NOW, but everything she has been involved in the past 10 threads has been without her abilities. She had to convince us that she was legit on her own.

That said, if she's really a professional at this, she may have been acting since moment one in the Silent Room, making up the stuff about her parents and co-workers to get our trust. You clear your throat, loudly, trying to get some semblance of control over this situation that's somewhat turning into one of those tawdry little fantasies where one guy - or girl - ends up with multiple sex partners. You're pretty sure that's as unrealistic as an outcome gets, and someone will definitely get stabbed or shot or used as fertilizer in that scenario. Not a matter of if, but when, and you'd like to get away from that.

You look down at Midori, and tell her that she should be more responsible with what she says and does. You're flattered, after all - who wouldn't be? - but she needs, at least, to spend a few days with you to see if the real Murderface lives up to whatever kind of Murderface the rumor mill keeps on talking about. You're sure, at least, that they've massively exaggerated your kill count, and you're not even using your Time Stop ability all that much recently anyway.

Kyoko also gets the same talking-to. Although hers is more of a threat than a lecture - if she talks about this with ANYONE, her butler pictures will be leaked into the Internet, and you'll have Misaka make sure that they're a permanent, irremovable fixture on the 'tubes. Alien civilizations will come upon this ruined earth, many aeons later, and wonder what sort of dapper creature stands before them as they access the remains of our databases. You leave her with this as you make to wheel Midori past the both of them - you figure you'd make the trip to get her legs back, too, from the resident Nurse there.

See the hole in your reasoning for Iori is this.
So far she has proven to be in more danger when she is not around us. Her guards were about as useful as a sock full of sand against the otaku's and Midori, the entire album launch was Kilgore's plan to murder everyone for pinky and she is known to be around us thanks to Kirika and the yakuza who we are currently hated by.

Quite simply that girl is safer with the inevitable death that comes from associating with us than the uncertain rather constant threat of death that comes from standing away

Sigh, I know this won't pass (too late for acceptable response and too much in way of Touching Fluffy Tail) but...

"Koyko, may I ask you for a little thing? Give your Soul Gem to Sayaka for a second."
Smile mysteriously.
"Sayaka, now just hold it like this..." take Midori's Soul Gem out of inventory and hold it between your fingers... "and do exactly what I do."

Fondle it for a bit... then give it long strong lick.

Homuru and Mami would be good shots in their normal form, and Sayaka and Kyoko seem to be quiet agile even in their plainclothes. They ALL can super jump and take incredible punishment in their normal form, too.

"C-Chiaki! Wait!"

She reaches out and grasps your wrist. You blink at this, and once more as Sayaka pulls you close. Whispering in your ear.

"...Send those..uh...pictures to me later, yeah? You have my phone number, right?"

Wordlessly, you nod.

"Good. Later." It's then she lets go, and makes to push Kyoko forward. Ignoring you as if nothing had happened.

"Sayaka-chan, what was that about? Are you plotting something with Murderface?" You hear Kyoko ask.

"What? Me, plot something with that boozehead? Are you insane? Just...just shut up and let me figure out how we're going to sleep later, okay?"

"O-okay..."

You shake your head as you wheel Midori forward yourself. The couple's bickering receding into silence as the distance between you increases.

It's times like these that make you wonder just why you drink, and then realize the answer has been in front of you all along.

That everyone you know would be better off without you.

In that case, we may want to leave Midori in secure custody for a day longer while Chiaki makes preparations for her. This will involve talking to Iori, looking at the new apartment that Kyubey has prepared, and checking to see if Midori's story is real or not.

Remember, she initially told us that her name was Sakamoto Midori. Her actual name as revealed by Kyubey was Hanegawa Midori or something. As much d'aww it would be to believe her, her whole gimmick is deception and trickery. She would not be a very good Callidus if she used her powers as a crutch.

For all we know, her parents could be fictional. Or she could have tricked a bunch of childless schmucks into believing that they had a daughter named Midori.

People are forgetting an awful lot about the circumstances for our original interrogation of her, including her being figuratively leg less to go with the literally. She was all over the place and quite rightly expecting death, she had no more reason to keep lying

While I do admit the girl's life is in danger on a near constant basis at the moment, may I offer a counter point?

Frankly, all I see Iori as is a Principal. Not a love interest. Not a friend. Not a Mark. Just a Principle. And I will vote her off Murderface island the New Yark Minute her checks bounce or stop coming in.

Chiaki is a Magical Girl. An exceptionally Murderiffic, Gun happy, violence prone Magical Girl who's getting even more so than usual due to the Golden Bane Weapons that are showing up. I'd much rather have Chiaki getting some action from someone who can fully understand the risks of such a relationship, and agree to them anyway.

Nut, perhaps I'm just old fashioned, and don't like exposing people to more danger than they can reasonably attempt dealing with. Iori will be consumed by the firestorm that is Chiaki's life - it's just a matter of time. At least the other Magical Girls have a bucket list.

People's heads are full of knowledge, facts, and beliefs, and most of it is false, yet they think it all true. I don't particularly see Iori as anything but the principal and a very messed up girl, but I do see that all that will be achieved by her being removed from chiaki's life is a quicker and possibly more horrible death than what awaits her if she keeps clinging onto her.

There is also the fact that she isn't just clinging to chiaki because she wants her, she is clinging to chiaki because she has proven to be looking out for her and makes her feel safe. Twice now there has been a situation that would have killed or scarred her beyond all recognition and twice the only thing that has stopped that was murderface. The second time we even saved two of her friends which further would have reinforced in whatever thought processes the girl has that chiaki = safe.

In a sense she is making herself more dependent on chiaki by having to be dependent on her in the first place

This.

I believe that not only is already In Too Deep, she has also gotten to the point where she WANTS to be here. She's naive and afraid, but I think she's gotten an extremely clear picture of what's going on in our life and what's at stake by being around us.

She's also currently the best thing that has happened to Chiaki thus far. The only reason we're doing better is because of her prodding us into being a better person. Sure, it's over the course of the quest that we've gotten this way, but it was her demanding us brush our teeth that made us start the turn around.

Last, as stated, she's only alive because she's our Principal. If we had said no to her escort request, and let, say, Kyoko do it, she'd be dead and we'd have Sayaka coming for our necks right now. The moment she leaves us, she's probably dead.

I am 100% for the Iori camp.

I would like you to think on Fabiola's words. She called out to us at the bar because our Golden Bane Desert Eagle reminded her of Kilgore's Golden Ban Bracers. She even mentioned she'd seen them herself.

Ostensibly, this means Kilgore had them for at least one other party, in which at the very least Garcia and perhaps even Iori and her friends attended, without losing his mind and going full on Flesh Of Fallen Angels / Chaos Demon on people.

I read the entire fight as 'Kilgore see shiny object, Kilgore Want Shiny Object, Kilgore Denied?!? Anger = Flesh Of Fallen Angels Tiem.'

Or, boiled down: HULK SMASH.

So, as far as I am concerned, that entire sequence of events ONLY happened because Chaiki Was There.

Deculture, if it's not Metagaming too much, as the DM, could you tell us the probability of Kilgore going Flesh of Fallen Angels / Chaos Demon mode had we not have been attending the party?

I really think that having her around us is inviting more of the chaos, not less. I would like to experiment and have Iori be protected by someone else within our outfit for a while, to see if that proves true.

We made the right decision for our job and self but the wrong decision to save those people. We would have caused much more panic but the guards would have been unprepared and so the people fleeing woud have taken care of clearing the area for us.

It would have been a personal loss but a gain for being able to get rid of Iori by making her see that she didn't need us.

Personally I am fine with how it turned out, just I can see from how it turned out that Deculture set it up that way

REPOSTANG

You've pretty much inspired me, Deculture. I'm currently working on a series of flash animations set in the Megucaverse.

A hardboiled no-nonsense investigator is hired to check out a series of mysterious disappearances of young girls in the planned city of Mitakihara. He suspects sexual deviants, human trading, sick murderers. He won't be prepared for what he finds. Private Eye monologuing everywhere, cigarettes, hard booze, hard truths.

We're about to make it happen as a flash animation in the style of something like this http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=DXDX32Vy5H8. All black/white, with some colors added in like in Sin City. Anyone interested?

What will show up, in no particular order, is:

Mental breakdowns
Police crackdowns
Gunfights against Puellas
Backstabbing (literal and metaphorical)
Kindness and care
Magical Gangs
INVESTAGATING

And much more. The original puellas don't play a big role in this because durrfanfiction. The green one is Hitomi though, as you might have noticed.

I bet that Chiaki's life was so much simpler when she was Murderface. This whole being a human being stuff is hard shit for her. Much easier to be a booze-swilling, painkiller addicted killing machine rather than having to juggle friendships and harboring unwelcome (and unintentional) romantic attention.

I think we'd be sitting on our comfy chair, Misaka napping on one of the armrests with leaning her head against our shoulder as we pat her head and pet her. Midori would be sitting at our feet resting the back of her head against our legs while squirming. We'd be alternating between taking drags of a cigarette and licking her soulgem.

Iori walks in carrying a glass of water, she drops the glass a shocked look on her face.

We take one last lick of the soul gem and say one gravelly word "Pancakes" and point her at the kitchen.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 07/26/12(Thu)08:29 No.20045550

You are a Magical Girl, and you're back in your costume, all fresh and clean and brand-spanking new. Hell, you even showered before transforming. The accursed maid uniform - or rather, the bloody, crusty vestiges of fetishistic servitude you've been walking around for the better part of the night before - now probably on its way to the incinerator, along with Officio trash. Your shield at your right arm, your costume all crisp and clean - and hey, new glasses. Well, not really new - a spare pair that Mami had thoughtfully gifted you with, along with the original. Just in case you lost the first.

Reunited, and it feels so good.

You'd actually sing it, if you weren't feeling particularly sore with being up and about at this hour.

You have an idol to say goodbye to, after all.

>> ☐ Deculture 07/26/12(Thu)08:30 No.20045558

It's morning. Seven, maybe eight hours after you got home from the worst assignment you've ever had the dubious pleasure of fucking up.

Granted, it wasn't really a failure. It just didn't go exactly as you planned it. The principal got back home safely, of course, and those responsible for the affair have been reduced to biological matter courtesy of a repeated application of ballistic firepower - but it brought about certain things that you think you could have lived without. Things involving a certain pink-haired bitch that you are, frankly, getting sick of seeing in your nightmares. In your dreams.

But things came to a close well enough. None of the people you consider the closest thing to friends died in the operation, although there were a few close calls. You have found yet another reason to pick Misaka up, cuddle her, and tell her that she's the best little sister money could ever buy. You also managed to acquire your very own Callidus - a Magical Girl whose primary focus is subterfuge and espionage, a rare resource second only to the Culexus. You don't know if the fact that she's trying to actively get into your panties is a good thing or not.

In any case, she's now with you - in fact, she's your driver for now, in the company car that you had ridden in the night prior with Kyoko and Iori. You're in the passenger seat, the window rolled down as you enjoyed your morning smoke. Midori, to her credit, seems to be adjusting quite well to the idea of having a new employer - and she's not that bad a driver, even for someone who had just regained her legs five hours ago.

Why? Because Kyuubey has arranged for you to leave for Siberia in five hours, and you need to say your goodbyes. And also decide on who you're going to take - Kyuubey has allowed you to pick two people to go with you on the trip. Minase Iori, of course, is exempt from such a trip.

"So, uh..." Midori has been sneaking glances at you the entire time she's been driving. You've directed her attention back to traffic a couple of times already, but you gave up after the first ten times. She's dressed rather conservatively - a black jacket with a hoodie, black cycling shorts ending in mid-thigh, black socks and running shoes. She looks like a damn parkour artist. "Who are you taking, Murderface?" She asks you for the tenth time this hour, her expression hopeful.

[]I'm still thinking.

You've been thinking about who you're going to take the entire time since Kyuubey had told you about the trip. As much as you'd like to, you can't take everyone in your ever-dwindling social circle - there'd be too much of a vacuum left if you do. While Kyuubey can certainly afford to let one of his top Vindicares go on a short sabbatical, he certainly can't have his new Callidus, another Vindicare, and two of his highly-ranked Eversors unavailable for any assignments. Minase Iori is definitely out of the question, as the Officio's R&D isn't somewhere you take your principal under any circumstances.

You take a long drag off your cigarette, enough to nearly reduce it to its filter, before blowing the smoke out of the window leisurely. You've already thought of your decision, and you believe, under the current circumstances, it's the most sound. Some people will definitely not be pleased with it at all, but they can just eat cake.

"I'm taking you and Misaka." You murmur after a long, interminable silence. "You haven't met her before. My arms dealer. She's a bit weird, but that's just her way." You give her one of your trademark glares, your eyes narrowing behind your glasses. "You behave when she's around, and no funny stuff--" You're cut off as the car suddenly comes to a screeching halt, and the traffic behind your car suddenly erupts in irritated honking. "--HEY! EYES ON THE FUCKING ROAD, HANEGAWA!"

"S-sorry," Midori murmurs, properly cowed, cheeks flushing as she eases the company car back into motion and into the proper lane. "I-I was just...surprised, that's all. I've...I've never been overseas before. Not even on a mission. I've always been a local girl." She hazards another look at you, paling as she sees you still glaring at her. "I...thanks, Murderface. Thank you for choosing me."

You grumble at her before taking another cigarette from your pack, using the dying embers of your last one to light it.

Midori pales at that. "I...I was going to tell you, honest." She says this with the contrite air of a young child apologizing to a parent for being caught on a bare-faced lie. "I made up my mind that if you were going to actually...dispose of me, I'd give you my real name so you could give my body back to my parents. Back then, I wasn't really all that sure, s-so I just gave you my cover name. I wasn't trying to deceive you or anything, Murderface, honest--"

You cut her off there. Whatever her reasons were, she should be sure that it will be the last lie she'd ever utter to your face. You didn't need to remind her, of course, that her Soul Gem is attuned to yours - which means that you can send a kill-signal to shatter hers wherever she was. She'd been briefed about it earlier, anyway.

You also tell her to cut it out with the 'Murderface' crap. You're not particularly proud of the name. If she must refer to you, she should use your last name, Matsuda, with the proper honorific. You are not fucking around here, even if she's your very first subordinate.

"I-I promise. Yes, I promise." Midori is obviously taken aback by this approach of yours, but her expression is determined, crimson eyes gleaming. "I understand, Matsuda-sempai."

You raise an eyebrow at that. You tell her to say it again.

"Matsuda...sempai?" She obeys, one eyebrow quirking in slight confusion.

You turn away from her in order to breathe smoke out of the window, a small smile on your face.

It sounds SO much better than Murderface-sempai.

The drive to the Lovelace Mansion resumes in silence after that, Midori seemingly taking her role here as your personal attendant and flunkie with sufficient gravitas to shut up and let you enjoy the rest of the way in silence. Of course, her obvious giddiness about going on a trip with you to some unknown country is helping, by the way she seems to be giggling silently to herself every now and then. This you ignore - you're no ogre. You let people be who they are after all is said and done.

After a while, you finally reach your destination - and you're briefly stopped by the usual security asking for identification. You hand over yours - it's the card identifying Officio Assassinorum staff that comes with every company card - and they usher you in after having your description verified by the mansion security, which you know is currently making breakfast and bustling about in maid skirts at the moment.

Midori stops the car just at the driveway, where you can see Fabiola waiting for you, holding a closed umbrella behind her. She gives you a small wave and a smile, and you return it with a half-hearted one. Your assistant blinks at this, and nudges you with an elbow.

"H-hey, Murde--er, Matsuda-sempai. Who's the cute maid?"

"...Contact," You say as you unbuckle your seat belt. "Need to talk to her and a couple of people before we go." Of course, you didn't exactly tell Midori who else we were going to say our goodbyes to. "Stay here and wait for me. I won't be long."

"I'm coming with!" Midori makes to unbuckle her seat belt as well, and you blink at this. Insubordination, already?

You resist the temptation to pinch the bridge of your nose - and you let out the sigh of the massively bereaved as you turn to address Midori, who seems to be chomping at the bit to get out of the car and get into the Mansion, to see just who Matsuda-sempai is about to meet.

You tell her, in no uncertain terms, that she must stay in the car. Since this is your first day together, you're going to make allowances - one of which being explaining the logic behind your order. You need someone to watch over the company car, and you need it ready to run by the time you get out - it saves time, since you're both on the clock, here. You have places to go and people to meet.

You then reiterate that your relationship, as of the moment, is a professional one. You shouldn't have to explain why you tell her to do things - her job, right now, is to obey you without question. You'll try not to be capricious about it, of course - you need a subordinate, not a lackey - but if you're in charge, then you ARE in charge, and you will have her ass for insubordination faster than she could spin a yarn.

Midori is once more cowed at this, and for a moment she looks like she's about to cry - but the determined expression comes over her face again, even though her eyes are still misty. "O-okay, Matsuda-sempai. I...I understand. I'll wait here."

You bite your lip to prevent yourself from saying anything else that might set off a disaster, before you nod silently and pull the door open. You'll steal her something nice to eat from the breakfast table, you say. She brightens up at that, at least slightly.

You close the door behind you, puffing furiously at your cigarette, and it's then that you make your way towards Fabiola, whose smile widens at your approach.

"Ah. No longer Pretend Maid, now Magical Girl. Your moniker is famous, I recognize your attire - Murderface, is it not?"

"Chiaki Matsuda," you reply stiffly. "Good morning, Fabiola."

"Good morning, Chiaki." She says your first name like it's the name of a fine dish, or fine aged wine. Usually, you'd object to someone you barely know just saying your first name like that, but right now you don't mind.

"Please, come in. My Master - and yours - is waiting for you in the Dining Hall. Breakfast has just been served."

She turns on her heel and makes to walk up the ivory steps leading to the massive double doors that serve as the main entrance to the mansion. You follow suit, falling in step behind her. Finding yourself unconsciously imitating her walk.

"I'm glad to see you safe and well, Chiaki." Fabiola says smoothly as the both of you come to a stop in front of the doors. She lifts a large iron ring bolted to the massive slabs of teak, and lets it drop twice - and it's then that the doors move, creaking loudly, until enough of a space is made between the both doors that the two of you could easily walk through, even abreast. You slip into the mansion after Fabiola - pointedly ignoring how ungodly rich the furnishings inside are. "Master was very concerned, as was Minase Iori-san."

Yeah, you got that last night. That's why you're here.

"Minase Iori-san was relieved when you called, though. At that time, we were in the Master's study. But..." Fabiola narrows her eyes at you as she leads you to the Dining Hall. "What did you say to her that had her crying so much? Even after the second time you called, she was still in tears. She cried herself to sleep, Chiaki."

She is rather clingy, but she seemed to be rather enamored of Murderface. Again, how?

We didn't really have any indication that Kilgore was planning a murder orgy until after he had his Operators start operating operationally barring the exits and his murderharem start shanking people. At which point we removed our Principle from the scene in the most efficient manner possible.

Are you suggesting that shooting the dude in the head when we first met him, in the, at that time, peaceful, non-violent party would not have gotten us in MORE trouble? That may well be true, but it's entirely based on hindsight. At the time, we did as well as could be expected.

"Ah. I would have wagered that it was something like that. Forgive me for being completely honest, Chiaki, but you are as tactful as a house on fire." This uncomfortable conversation is punctuated by the sounds of your heels clacking loudly on the polished marble with every step - a disturbing sound, considering that you see Fabiola wearing the exact same shoes, but making no sound whatsoever - even if she's keeping in pace with you, with no visible effort at all.

You turn towards her to try and explain, but she raises a hand to stop you, her face still set forward, not turning to look at you. "Please. Stop. There is no need to be specific, Chiaki. We have only met once - twice, if you count this occurence. Are you actually going to share things you'd rather keep to yourself to someone who is just as much a stranger as your new...subordinate, who you have coerced into waiting in your car?" Fabiola turns slightly towards you, finally, a smile on her face. "Have a care. Maids are notorious gossips - even more, those who carry armaments."

You shut up, then. Man, everyone is just giving you shit today.

"The...Head Maid wishes to give you her thanks, too." It's then that Fabiola's voice changes slightly, subtly. You're not sure, but you hear just the slightest bit of...envy, from Fabiola, as well as quite the begrudging admiration. "She bids me to thank you for helping me get the Master to safety. She also apologizes for disposing of your MK 22 Tranquilizer pistol - she had to make sure Master would not hurt himself more with any firearms lying around in his possession."

You shake your head. That's fine. It's then that you narrow your eyes behind your glasses as you wonder about something.

Wait, where is the Head Maid, anyway?

"In the Dining Hall, serving the Master breakfast, along with Minase Iori. She is his Custodian, most of all." The maid smiles, before frowning slightly. "Although, I'm not sure for how much longer..."

No use in complaining about the whole affair with Kilgore any more.

I suppose we screwed up by not telling her we were ok after the fact, after all we apparently see her as a friend and not some girl loaded up on unhealthy saviour worship.

Still, we're not married to Iori. Our responsibility is to ourselves (something we aren't good with being a drunken, pill popping amnesiac). So we apologise for not telling a friend we were ok, but then we do what we want regardless. Make sure she understands she can't come with us on assignments and she will have the agency look after her, maybe the Lovelaces will host for her for the duration, that Garcias kid seems alright.

Midori needs handled professionally. Between her hero worship and stockholm syndrome she's all kinds of needy right now. So how about we avoid the creepy 'soul gem experimentation' for our captives, magic BDSM isn't exactly what we're here for or the kind of reputation we're looking to garner.

Midori is no longer a captive, she's a subordinate. We're going to work with her. So far Deculture has got the tone right now we've recruited her, but I thought I'd better ask you guys not to get too creepy with her if only to avoid derailing our noir investigation for fetishism.

Fabiola lets out a sigh at this. "Even if I am worried, I do not know just what is ailing her, or if we could even help." It's then that she stops in her tracks, before turning to face you fully. "It is...considerate of you to ask, though. When I do find out, are you amenable to my asking for your assistance, once more? Of course I will not hold it against you if you are too occupied with your assignments or anything else, but...your consideration would be a boon, here."

You blink at this, before you shrug. Sure, why not? If she's not going to be a bitch about you not taking it, then you'll certainly keep yourself open for her.

"Excellent. Chiaki, you restore my faith in your kind." She bows, before resuming her walk down the corridor you're currently in. You strive to keep up, momentarily stunned at the developments at first.

She has that low of an opinion regarding Magical Girls, huh? Well, looking at yourself, you can see why.

After a few moments' worth of walking, you finally come to the Dining Hall. It's boringly impressive, and you try not to glance at the lurid oil paintings of family members looking quite constipated while sitting still for their portraits.

The unnecessarily-long dinner table is also present here, but instead of the usual setup where the lord of the mansion is sitting on one end and his guest on the other - Iori and Garcia are actually sitting side by side, talking rather animatedly with each other. Iori's even giggling at his jokes, and it doesn't look forced.

"Master. Minase Iori-sama." Fabiola calls, her voice echoing crisply in the cavernous dining room. "Chiaki Matsuda has arrived."

"Thank you, Fabiola," Garcia says after a moment, nodding at the maid before turning to you. "Ah, Matsuda-san! Please, join us for breakfast! It's Western, and Iori-san here told me how much you liked pancakes!"

He gestures towards the other end of the table closest to you - and you spy a place, already set up, a stack of pancakes already there. Perfectly-baked, perfectly-shaped, with just the right amount of syrup.

Except they're not made by a certain blonde girl you would kill for.

You glance at Iori. She seems to be doing her level best not to look at you.

Yeah. It means "don't rely on this in situations where it not working might mean the death of you or your primary unless you have no other choice".
We had a choice, and that choice was to do thing the Vindicare way. Smile and nod away until you get to a range where you can shoot them dead and they can only die.

The deafening bang of the hospital door interrupted my little speech. Beyond the abused portal stood a perfectly poised, yet quivering angel of loveliness. On her face was a perfectly-executed Stepford Smile.

I have to admit, she looks lovely even when she's angry. What did Shakespeare say about women and anger again?

"Mi-miss Tomoe! I didn't notice you come in!" Takane, in a rare feat of being caught off-guard, stammered.

"In fact, Miss Shijou, weren't you about to leave?" I hinted, nudging Takane to the door.

"Oh gosh! I must be going! See you later!" And with that, Takane hurriedly rushed out.

Wordlessly, she proceeded to unpack a feast before my eyes. It's actually a bit early for lunch, but then again, home-cooked food tastes a lot better that hospital food.

A few minutes of awkward silence followed as we dug in. We'd usually be commenting on the food.

I attempt eye contact. She responds with that same Stepford Smile I saw earlier. But something's a bit off. Her eyes are wet, as if she's holding back tears.

The meal continues. I try to make a little small talk, but to no avail. I give up after a while and focus on finishing up the food.

"Is, is there anything I can do to help?" I asked.

"It's okay. You just sit and rest." Her reply was nice-sounding, yet curt.

It was then our eyes meet. Those beautiful golden irises that enchanted me from the first moment we met were now showing a side of the woman in front of me. A side that I had seen many times. A side I had sworn to protect, up until my last breath. A side, I just realized, I had inadvertently revealed with my big fat mouth.

Her packing done, she turned around annd left, the door closing shut behind her.

"Mami! Wait! I was-"

"I see that you are well, for someone who almost bled to death." DAMMIT.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and you are not amused.

You've never been good in social situations, especially when you're more or less at the center of them. Guarding a principal in the middle of a record launching-cum-gala doesn't count - in the guise of a maid, you're practically rendered invisible from the sight of others, and that suits you just fine. But for those that actually involve your active participation, when the attention itself is on you - you don't deal with it all that well. You don't want to deal with it at all, period.

But you have to, and you know that the longer you put this off, the worst it'll get.

>> ☐ Deculture 07/27/12(Fri)09:14 No.20056242

It's morning. When you should be in your own apartment and starting your day off with half a bottle of whiskey and a handful of painkillers, you're in the Dining Hall of a certain Garcia Lovelace instead, at the far end of a table long enough to sit a large number of rich people. At the opposite end is Garcia Lovelace himself, sitting right beside your Principal, Minase Iori. They've been smiling and laughing together before you came in, eating breakfast like a couple of lovebirds.

For some reason, you've been clenching your right hand for a fair bit as you watch them together. You loosen your fingers just as soon as you notice, wondering what brought that on.

In any case, Garcia had just asked you to join him - and Iori - for the consumption of breakfast and breakfast-related foodstuffs. You're not really one to barge into other people's houses to join them in the first meal of the day, but you're certainly not one to refuse a free meal. Especially if said meal consists of a nice healthy stack of perfectly-baked pancakes, with the right amount of syrup and a small slice of butter floating at the very top, shaped like a flower. Just like how Mami made them for you.

You start to wonder just how much Iori had told the Lovelace household about you.

Staring at the stack of pancakes, you let out a sigh, before looking at Garcia and then nodding.

"Fine," You hear yourself say. "I can spare a few minutes."

You take your seat at the far end, across from Iori and Garcia, and you unfurl the folded linen handkerchief placed near the utensils laid out beside your plate with a snap. Fabiola steps forward to help you place the napkin itself on your lap, but she stops as she sees you tie the cloth around your neck in a crude bib. She all but giggles into a gloved hand as she looks at you, and you give her a glare.

"What?" You ask her, annoyed. She shakes her head and steps back, the small smile remaining on her face moments before it's smoothed out with maidly dignity.

You hear another giggle from across the table, and you turn towards the source of the sound. Garcia is studiously studying the remains of his eggs and bacon, while Iori is turned away, although her shoulders are shaking slightly.

Rich people, you grumble as you pick up your knife and fork.

Might as well see how their kind of pancakes measure up to Mami's, you think as you get started on the pancake at the very top of the pile. Spearing it right through with one judicious stab of the fork.

"So, um, Matsuda-san." Garcia says after a moment of silence where he - and Fabiola - just stares in astonishment as they watch you demolish three pancakes without even stopping. "I'd like to personally thank you for helping us with the...incident from last night. I don't know what Fabiola and I would've done if you weren't there."

You shake your head as you get started on your sixth pancake, the fourth and fifth already well on their way down your stomach. You tell him that Fabiola was more than enough to get him out of any scrap - you just took the credit by shouting a lot and being really pushy. If there's anyone that needs thanking, it's the both of them - as they helped you get Iori and her friends to safety while you ran off being stupid.

"A-ah. Well, um. It was nothing, really..." Garcia seems to be flushing crimson at your praise, a fact you don't notice as you're literally demolishing that pancake tower. For pancakes that Mami didn't have a hand in, they were...alright. Yes. That's as far as you're going to go with your praise.

You notice Iori elbowing him slightly on the side, and the young man clears his throat.

"Um. Well, in any case. Matsuda-san, Iori-san wants me to tell you that she's happy that you're alright. What she's not happy about is that you took much too long to tell her. She was...very worried, and if she says if you're just going to spend your time fooling around with other girls..." It's here that Garcia goes red. "...you should at least have the decency to tell her first."

How do you respond?

Iori's getting complacent. We should apologise for at least not calling her to confirm our well being and the only reason we're apologising is because we view her as a friend now.

We probably shouldn't pretend that what we were doing didn't involve pleasure in some way. The lie will get back to us eventually. Instead we should simply explain that sometimes we need to get away and drink with strangers. It's less intense and doesn't kill the mood with talking about emotions.

She's lived with us for a week or so now. She should get a hint about what we're like. We do this, we are our own agent. She's not our wife.

We've got an emotionally vested client. This requires tact. A resource that has been shown, and commented upon, to be lacking in Matsuda. Last thing anyone needs is an emotional breakdown.

So the question is, how to handle this with the minimum amount of tact to not cause Iori to have an emotional meltdown and cause Chernobyl II inside this fellow's (admittedly gigantic) dining room.

I'm in favour of calling her a child. She's acting like one, and even though Chiaki really does care for her, as much as her scabby little soul can allow, she still doesn't have to take crap from her. It makes sense for the character as we've developed her to give into Iori far more than nay other person, but to be frank, Murderface is still a bitch, and if we don't let that show through some times, we're not undergoing character development, we're just playing a different character.

Except we have been over this multiple times chucklefuck
She is fucked if she goes away. Twice this has been proven and that should be enough to reinforce that if you want her not to die horribly, become a magical girl or do something else to fuck us over royally we need to stop being a cunt (I know this is hard but if you cannot do this then shut the fuck up) and steer her away from worse influences and situations than she is in just by being near us which she seems to be a fucking magnet for.

Jumping up and down and trying to act like a dick won't magically make her go away, Deculture will just twist it to even worse ends the more we try

I'm all with you up until the whole licking soul gems thing. I don't even mind the occasional piece fetishism during our downtimes, but giving Iori our Soul gem ever sounds like a recipe for disaster.

It's not a toy. That's our life. We toyed around with Midori's soul gem because we were literally toying with her life during the interrogation, it wouldn't be wrong to call it rape (albeit as a experimental torture technique).

In keeping with our paranoia we should only entrust our soul gem to people we trust without a doubt, right now the closest to that is Mami, maybe Kyoko though we wouldn't have any reason to fool with her. We don't currently trust Mami's judgement so I'd say she's pushing it too.

Anyway, we should avoid direct intimacy with Iori in the hope she gets the hots for Garcia or something. I'm not saying we should dump her entirely, friends are something we like, it's a safety net, but relationship with someone who only likes us because we saved them at a rough time? She was bordering on obcession, who knows what crazy controlling shit she'll do if we give her any power over us.

Apologizing for not calling earlier when she tried calling us 30 consecutive times just to make sure that we weren't a red splatter on the wall with glasses could help smooth the situation over a little bit. While she's not our keeper or someone who has any direct authority as to what we do with our free-time, we have to let her down gently or she'll snap. We don't want to gain another enemy Magical Girl in the future or provide a potential target for Pinky.

At any rate, we shouldn't get into this game that she's trying to ensnare us in. It's a bit out of our element, and we're still on a schedule here.

Neckbeards can scream all they want about /a/ shit but this is just how it has been presented to us.
The character that we have ended up as is trying to actually be less of a cunt and less a waste of space and holy fuck there is a character that it is established A cares about her and B is trying to help her change which means we generally avoid going "hurp durp grimdark manly bullshit" every time something happens.

Yes we bend to her a bit much but surprisingly that's what people do for those they care about. Something that is obviously a foreign concept to half the people in this thread.

If you've been reading the quest you will realise that the character does that because of our decisions. There are some things that were established at the start by Deculture, but as we made choices we've started to change. Everyone was at some point including Iori as a possible ship so that possessiveness was picked up on.

Dropping her can be worked out IC, with Kyoko we got a big case of 'people around us get hurt' which can give us a reason to suddenly clam up.

Well, this is all moot point really, as I don't want to dump Iori, just point out we are the character, deculture just rationalises our choices with the setting.

My advice if it's not too late?

Apologise curtly, she's being bratty but she's earned that this time. She's a idol normally it's nice to see she's not mindlessly loyal. If we expect her to let us be ourselves we have to expect she acts like a princess sometimes.

Briefly explain that we needed a break away from all the people you are close to. That's both true AND will imply we're close to her but needed some space.

Point taken comrade. That would trully simplify things, but with the mutant cat eyeing us and Chiaki being monitored for golden gun corruption, that would be a bad idea.

And to the people saying that she is acting like a brat, no offense but that is to be expected. She is ateenage idol with a pretty face and an even prettier bank account. She may have not been born in wealth, but she sure is in now. BEing rich at that age will have some consequences.

This. Even if some people don't like it, our character cares deeply for Iori. The whole idea is for us to make decisions our character would make. The occasional bit of harshness and rough edgedness should come through, but we still put up with far more of Iori's crap than we would from even Mami, and we'll accept pretty much anything from the flaxen haired pancake wench who cared about us when no one else did. That being said, Chiaki can't communicate the way she feels the way we can. She's still learning how to be a human being, so any suggestions where we reasonably discuss our emotional state are pants on head retarded, and very out of character. We should ignore this farce, and just talk straight to Iori. She's being petty because she cares about us, so she get's a pass, but if she keeps on talking through Garcia, we thank him for his hospitality and we walk out.

You take your time chewing and swallowing the last surviving pancake of your once-tall tower of soft, fluffy, syrup-soaked heaven. You have murdered each and every one that had come before it with the stark efficiency and precision that has become expected of you - and it's with a rare sense of bliss that you savor the very last bite, letting its memory linger on your tongue before you let it slide down your throat. Your eyes closing momentarily as you let the warmth blossom from your stomach.

"Would...you like some more, Matsuda-san?" Garcia is the first to speak, and he must have deduced your answer from the look on your face as he nods at Fabiola. She immediately seems to materialize beside you, replacing your empty plate with one endowed with a taller pile. You don't even wait for Fabiola to retract her hand before you start again. Devouring pancakes like no one's business.

But before you stick the neatly-sliced cut of pancake into your mouth, it's then that you manage to stop yourself - and with no small amount of self-control, you place your fork down on the plate as you look at the couple sitting across from you. Garcia 's eyes widen as he sees your glare - but it's mostly Iori you're looking at, who is trying to return it with a good amount of embarrassment and indignation.

You're not a social person. That you understand yourself.

But you think you know how to handle this.

"I apologize."

You say this. Not murmuring, not mumbling, not grumbling. You say it loudly and clearly enough so that it carries to the other end of the table, eliminating any chance of confusion on Iori's part. You're also momentarily surprised at how rough your voice is, but that's neither here nor there.

Iori blinks at this, but does not look away.

"I apologize for not calling right away." You place your knife down beside your plate, the serrated edge still glistening with syrup. "A mistake on my part. It's only standard procedure that I do so, in order to check on your safety after I left you in their care. I recognize my failing and will be sure to correct it."

"W-well, I don't think you really need to, Matsuda-san, you had pressing issues to deal with--" Garcia seems to blurt out, but Iori shushes him. He hastily apologizes in a whisper, and you wonder just how close they've become in the short time they've been together. "Anyway, Matsuda-san, it was just that--"

"But that is all I am going to apologize for." You cut Garcia off as you continue. "I am sure Minase Iori-san is aware of my drinking habits. It's my way of...unwinding, especially after work. I will not make excuses for it, and only admit that it is a vice I partake in. I will also not apologize for it, nor will I apologize for her hearing a colleague's drunken antics. I do not believe that qualifies as fooling around - but even if it does, why would she care? Why would my client care about how I spend my free time?"

Iori's eyes widen at this, seemingly stunned into silence, before turning away, seemingly angry, embarrassed and close to tears all at once.

To be fair, it only happens with decisions that are clearly setting the tone for a relationship or a key encounter. The other arguments are never ending, really all I want is something more middle of the road. Pursuing a harem will be the death of this quest, same could be said for unnecessarily cruel torture and decisions.

I want Noir investigations into the goings on in our Magic Girl universe, I want Noir tone to our Magic Girl relationships. I want Magic Girl Noir.

And I guess while I'm at it a slice of 40k is like the cherry on top, not everyone wants the cherry but that's just how shit is and we've got to take it or leave it as we want. Personally I think like the cherry on top it should just be a bit of garnish, not the focus. I like references but don't like when those references come and fight each other in place of Magic Girl duels.

"Matsuda-san, um, I don't think--" Garcia tries again, now clearly distressed as Iori buries her face into her hands. You frown slightly at this, but you can't step back now. Doing so would render everything else you've said moot. There has to be a line set, right now, and while it's regrettable, it has to be done now.

"Garcia-san. Please tell Minase Iori that I will be her friend if she wants me to. But she is my client first and foremost, and our relationship is a professional one." You pointedly ignore how Iori is now slumping forward, sobbing into her hands - and it's then that you feel the strangest compulsion to do someting about it. You're not too sure what you would do, but you're pretty sure it involves hugging.

You wipe your lips with your makeshift linen bib, before undoing the knot behind your neck and placing it down on the table, beside the plate of nigh-untouched pancakes. It's a pitiful sight, but clearly not as pitiful as you right now. Still, you have to continue. You have to finish what you've started. Stopping here would only be an insult to you and everyone involved.

You go on to explain in the same tone of voice that you came here for the express reason of notifying Minase Iori, your current client, that you are to attend to something important overseas. You'll be gone for a few days, but you'll be back within the week. In the meantime, Sayaka, Iori and Mami will take your place in rotating shifts.

Iori doesn't seem to respond or react to this, merely continuing to cry into her hands - until Garcia himself hands her an expensive-looking handkerchief with a family seal embroidered in the corner. She brokenly murmurs her thanks, and presses the handkerchief to her face as her shoulders continue to tremble, muffling her sobs.

"I...I see. Where would you be going, then, Matsuda-san? And...c-can we contact you if we need to?" Garcia seems to be taking up the other end of the conversation now, and you're relieved that at least one of you has the common sense to. You nod and reply in the affirmative, at least to the last part. As for where - you mention that it's classified, and that you'll be leaving in less than four hours from now.

"Alright, Matsuda-san. I understand." The blonde young man looks at you, then at Iori. "Does Iori-san need to relocate? If not, then she can stay here until you get back." He turns back to you, smiling rather awkwardly, a sort of appeal in his face that he wants to vocalize but is too polite to.

And it was pretty much a given that Iori is going to become a magical girl and either turn into a witch or fall into Pinky's hands. This is a noir, bad shit is going to happen no matter what choice we make.

That said, we really need to inform Midori about the golden weapons and Pinky. Midori knows of Pinky from her interactions with Pinky but she doesn't know everything. And if she's going to be our assistant she needs to know.

You can be harsh and gentle at the same time, we've done it before.

You respond to the affirmative. You were just about to suggest that - after thanking him for providing Iori and the squad of Eversors a safe place to sleep in during the events that had happened. The three girls that you've mentioned will be in fact dropping by here to check up on Iori from time to time, and escort her whenever necessary.

Garcia's face brightens visibly at this. "A-ah. Thanks, Matsuda-san. I'll...I'll make sure that Iori is safe here until you get back."

You supress a smirk as you give him a curt nod. Yes, of course Iori will be safe. With the Head Maid, Fabiola, and any one of your fellow Magical Girls, Iori will in fact be the safest Principal in the history of Principals under the protection of the Officio. No one will be able to lay a hand on her - barring Garcia himself, of course, should he choose to.

YOu find yourself somewhat irritated at that thought, before you banish it completely. You stand up and prepare to leave, but not before taking the plate full of pancakes with you.

"I'll have someone bring the plate back here. Is that alright?" You glance at Fabiola, and then at Garcia. Taking care not to set eyes at Iori.

Don't look. She's alright. Just don't look.

Right now we're roughly stuck between feeding Iori's obsession or distancing ourselves from it and calling it professionalism. We've not broken any ties but we've drawn a clear line.

Now I agree this will probably come with consquences, but there are so many arguments for what could set off Iori on the magic girl train that really we'd hear this kind of bitching no matter the choice. If we reciprocated her love she might chose to try and fight along side us, if we push her away because of professionalism she might decide that becoming meguca lets her form a real relationship, not one of a client.

Finally, if we completely cut her off, she might become a meguca out of spite.

All roads could lead to meguca. All of them, you are a fool if you think otherwise. We just make the decision we think fits, right now I don't want to feed Iori's obsession, Garcia is better not because it's safer but he's genuinely a better guy who likes her. We have other people we are chasing. Not Iori.

"Y-yes, that should be alright, Matsuda-san. Don't worry about it. Enjoy the pancakes." The blonde young man says hurriedly. "Please take care wherever you're going."

You say that you'll do your best, and it's then that you say your goodbyes, giving the Master of the House a curt bow before turning on your heel and walking the direction from whence you came. You hear Fabiola hurriedly excusing herself before following you.

"That...was not how I would have handled it, Chiaki." Fabiola says as she catches up to you. "I think you should recognize what she feels for you, instead of pretending that there's nothing there."

How do you respond?

Chiaki isn't the cold hearted professional that she's made out to be. She's struggled with that in the past, especially when it comes to relations with other people. She's best when she's in her element and needs to ventilate some annoying bastard, but once she's out of the office, it's back to being annoyingly emotional for her.

One gets the feeling that despite her best wishes, she DOES like having friends. She just doesn't really know what to do from there. You know, because she's, like, 14? How old are we, anyway? None of us seem to go to school, but we also can drive with no one questioning but are underage when it comes to barkeepers. Hmm... seems like twitter question.

That's the opinion that Murderface was creating, and that some people seem to want to continue perpetuating. The booze and pills don't make us sympathetic, they just make us too pathetic to and cowardly to stop being a pain to everyone and ending ourselves.

I find myself agreeing with this. Since the first thread, when we started telling people not to call us Murderface we've been trying to become a better person. It's been bumpy, and we've fucked up a whole lot, but we're trying. And that does count for something. The whole Midori thing happened when we did something stupid while drunk. Now we've hurt someone we find ourselves caring more about than we realised.

We should quit drinking. Now makes the most sense for us to do it, considering the fallout. We'll still fall off the wagon and get drunk and do stupid things, but now, feeling the urge to hug someone that we need to push away, knowing that her tears, and all her worry were caused because we were hiding in a bottle, is the time for us to try and stop hiding.

Saying all this, of course the grim derp people will ignore me, but I had to try.

Its not in character.

There's hints all over the place that Matsuda cares for Iori you fucking idiot.

And there's hints in the post that being a gigantic douche to her was a bad way to go. Especially since Deculture had to throw it in our faces that "IT WAS A RETARDED IDEA TO DO THAT" with Fabiola.

I'm not blaming fanbases or whatever, but the quality of our decisions will go up if everyone read the updates carefully. Instead of skimming and rushing to post a decision that's the direct opposite of what the character is hinting at in her thoughts.

Next time we face her we explain that all you can be is friends but that doesn't mean that you want her gone. Indeed you need all the friends you can cling to. Miss Murderface is simply not in the position to be someones lover.

Someone who is better off dead.

You thank her for the timely, thinly-veiled insult on your social skills. You would have been offended if you were subscribing to the illusion that you had any in the first place. Maybe, if she was as useful as a Miss Lonelyhearts clone as she was a glorified servant in frilly trappings, she could've warned you what NOT to do in advance. But she didn't, now did she?

"If you had only asked, Chiaki, I would have advised you on how to deal with such a delicate situation. A girl's heart is the most fragile of things, especially one that had been pulled open by another's hands." Fabiola shakes her head mournfully as she keeps up with your brisk walk down the corridor. "Those hands are yours no matter how you try to ignore it or even discount it. Honestly, I thought it would have been obvious to you--"

You stop in your tracks, the plate of pancakes in your arms, and you glare at Fabiola. She tries to meet your gaze, but averts her eyes after a few moments. You hear her mumble an apology, and it's then that you continue on your way. Leaving her in your wake, Fabiola looking after you, clearly disappointed at how well you've dealt with everything.

It's better this way, you tell yourself. No one needs you in their life - the same exact way no one needs a ragged, lacerated hole in their chest where their heart used to be.

You thrust the plate into her arms. You tell her that you'll be the one driving for now.

"A-alright, Matsuda-sempai. Key's still in the ignition." A moment. "Do...do you need tissues, Matsuda-sempai? I have some, here..."

Seriously guys, what quest have you been reading? Since when does Chiaki express how she feels towards those she's close to? We need something like this, something dramatic, something painful and unpleasant if we're going to let Iori in. If we just walked up to Iori and started whispering sweet nothings, and of our undying devotion to her, then sure, it'd be the better decision, but it wouldn't be Chiaki Matsuda making it! Now, we go to Siberia, hunt mecha bears with Misaka (who is a good girl) stress and agonise over how bad we fucked up, and when we get back, THEN we can try and chase Iori.

Hey guys, how about we stop shit storming over what was previously a consensus; to apologise and explain ourselves without conceding we do what we want. The fact we IC explained it badly is a testament to Deculture getting the tone of our 'thoughts' right and Chiaki's bad personal skills.

This isn't a matter of completely rejecting Iori being around us, just drawing a line on what we think the relationship is. Iori keeps encroaching on our personal affairs and has a unhealthy obsession with us. If we're going to have any chance of a healthy relationship we can't just give in because it looks bad. Defeats the whole point of the original distancing ourselves.

By the sounds of it you'd think we just spelled out doom, but really, we were going to make her cry at some point. Better we set ourselves out now and rebuild then pretend like everything is going to work out while everyone in the quest persues MAGIC RAPE with the other girls.

Yeah, what's more likely to send Iori to pinky? Telling her we are her body guard before her friend, or leading her on while we're fucking about with the girl who almost got her raped?

Both Midori and Iori need to go back to profession relationships slowly building up into friendships, not creepy obsession based relationships.

"No matter. You are going to accompany one of my agents to Siberia. You will receive your mission once you reach there."

I stare, slackjawed, at the mutant cat.

"Do not worry. You have enough time to pack and request whatever you need. You have been discharged effective immediately and you appear to be well enough." That fucking voice. Always one step ahead of me.

"I've also wired a down payment and am willing to pay you thrice your asking fee." Oh, shit.

"How much time do I have left?" I ask, stunned by the turn of events.

"About three hours. The flight leaves at noon."

"Where."

"As I said earlier, Siberia." QB repeated himself. I'm pretty sure he's not sending me there to sample the finest Russian vodka and shake hands with Putin, so I grab a sheet of paper and hurriedly put together a list of items I might need.

"Very well. Your requested items will be at the airport. See you around, Rogue Trader." And with that, he left.

I like how in the very first response I said to ask if the Iori would talk about this in private like a reasonable person.

Iori did not do so and for the entirety of this thread let third parties speak for her. Even as her supposed grief overwhelmed her she didn't try talking to us herself. She didn't even look at us as we went on, nor try to dissuade us from making this a purely professionally relationship.

If she wasn't willing to speak for herself nor try to keep what she obviously felt was a deep friendship, then there was nothing in the first place.

I think this is, overall, a good test of character for Iori.

Remember that when we first met her, one of the things she told us was something along the lines of "I pity you for letting yourself become someone who can't even understand why someone is upset with you." Shortly after that, we saved her from gang rape and had some awkward attempts at actual human interaction with her. The next day, she began to cling to Chiaki like a puppy, obviously idolizing (heh, pun) the one who had saved her. Not too long after that, the Kilgore assignment was her way of trying to get us to relax and unwind, get us away from a world of guns and death. Her own attempt to save us, I think. That went to the shitter fast, but the sentiments remain: Iori pities Chiaki, idolizes her, and wants to save her.

Now we push her away, for whatever reason, and show that even with her efforts, Chiaki might have improved but she's still emotionally crippled, can't properly express herself and still doesn't understand others well. Now Iori can do two things, run to Garcia and forget about Chiaki. Or she can toughen up and stick to her guns and try to reform Chiaki again once she comes up back. Personally, I think the second one is what is most likely to happen.

She's going to be with Mami, who's stuck with us through WORSE, and has clearly seen that Iori is a good influence on getting Chiaki to become more than an emotionally dead kill-bot.

That's my take on it anyhow.

I refute that remark with AC Quest (which is as much a beta of the Armored Core RPG homebrew), Meta Quest, and Strike Witches Quest.

Though that's not to say that they don't have their own arguments, of course.
Meta Quest has their Requisitions fights, and Strike Witches has 'BOUNCE and PILOT' vs. 'Don't be a fucking retard in front of the world press'.

It adds a certain flavour, and if you like that flavour then it's all good. But as soon as you add too much even people who like it get driven away, until you're left with the people who have no tastebuds. Which is why 40k by itself is bad!

I still don't get what the problem is. Everyone assumes bad faith from everyone else.

Let me break down to you what happened here in character. We got to the mansion guilty about magically raping Midori as a experiment and ultimately got a clingy subordinate who doesn't like listening.

So when we got to the mansion, the players weren't in the mood to explain themselves to Fabola nor ask her what the deal with Iori was and get help.

So we get in there and Iori is being childish. We decide and even after 100 posts agree to apologise only for not calling her, which wasn't cool on our part. Chiaki fell on her professional personality (the one she's used to) to do this. So she fucked it up and was blunt as hell when she didn't need to be.

People viewed this as trying to reject her, really we're just drawing a line on what we see the relationship as. She's crying because the way we said it sounds like we're not even friends, bit of a shame but alright. We then stuck to it because drawing a line then going back on it is worthless and would only make it worse.

So that's where we're at. Let's not forget her people who want a perfect solution. We just came back from making the girl (who almost got Iori raped) have a orgasm through magical 'torture' and back then no one was complaining about Iori's feelings.

This whole thing is pretty stupid. We're going to Russia, we caused a mess beforehand but it was still a mess we agreed to make. In the same way people have to deal with the whole terminator part, people now need to deal with the fact Chiaki didn't explain things well.

Big woop. Let's keep going and try and keep the endless accusations of who wants what out. Personally I'm glad deculture has the balls to let us fuck up relationships instead of letting us do everything perfectly without consequence. Everything we tell Chiaki to do goes through her actual talents first. Talking isn't one of them.

Oh, I hope I'm right too. I've gone from disliking Iori to being on board with chasing her because Chiaki likes her, so whilst I like what's happened thus far, it could really backfire. Which will just make Chiaki want to be a better person harder, so the next time she gets a chance, she doesn't fuck it up.

That was because MetaOP always dangled the candy-coated apple of Requisitions in front of his players after each harrowing mission.
But now that Requisitions is shut down, the arguments are much, much more muted.

Also, I'd say he's one of the best 'Actions have Consequences, You Dumb Shits' GM's ever.
90 threads. 90 threads where we were allowed to become complacent, when he springs the consequences of once choice we made back in the very beginning, and that we thought we had taken care of.
On top of that, because we didn't take care of another problem that we were told about, and warned about, it's ballooned into a potential crisis.

Finding idols is tough, because they need to be groomed and introduced once they're market ready. You can't just do it on a whim.
Support staff can be replaced but it would take a big investment in capital and familiarizing new staff with corporate procedures always takes time.
And given that Iori was best friends with an idol who was raped and had the video released to the Internet, then was herself attacked, and now was at the site of a massive bloodbath, the market analysts would be stupid to just pick her up before checking if she's even still worth it.

The market is fickle, and with everything that's happened to her, Iori may not be that valuable anymore.

Actually, I want you to prove your statements here. I can understand disliking the idea of 40k having influence on the quest beyond references on parallels, but I've never actually seen someone try and make the quest 'grim and dark.'

Seriously, even the 'Dump Iori on Garcias' crowd explain their logic well enough through I don't agree with the sentiment. Where has anyone tried to make this grim and dark.

We just came from seeing Kyoko's broken back and Sayaka who is really upset with us (again), it's not unreasonable to think people who want to help us will be hurt. No one is saying everyone should be pushed away, just Iori who is a normal person. Mami is a magic girl and we relate to her better.

I've not actually seen anyone suggest in this thread we should be more like 40k. People like that we're getting some Noir drama, some people are upset we're not talking about our feelings openly, I get that, but where is anyone truly trying to derail this shit?

Then he pops the bubble by saying "No, not really. That extradimensional entity you decided to show around your neighborhood? Congratulations, even after I told you what they were, you let the Magitek Borg get ahold of some of the most advanced magic and technology in the entire sector to assimilate. Between Iori being heartbroken, the signs that Chiaki isn't taking it well at all, and the mass of arguing over the point from the players, this thread really made me feel gloomy.

All in all, I think it's better to just roll with it right now. Deculture put the decision into the right IC context when he did it, it wasn't a perfect solution but perfect solutions are boring. If we trust him and quit bickering about the consensus we'll enjoy the thread more. Sometimes you gotta fail to build up to the best parts.

Again, you are projecting what you think everyone wants from this onto what they are actually arguing for. While there are a small number of people who genuinely dislike Iori but all the suggestions fit our current IC mindset. To suggest that Deculture completely derailed all our current character development over this is pretty insulting actually.

When people talk about making this quest more Noir what they mean is more realistic interacting to what we've always been like, even at the start of the thread we're told we aren't good in social situations. We turned down help, we explained what we wanted to say (and mostly agreed on) badly in character and then stuck with it. The fact we feel bad is a testament to our characters growth, but hey go figure, characters make mistakes too (through people might not want us to).

Point is, most of the arguments against Iori and for Iori are well reasoned, the way you dismiss them as grim dark faggots is just more of what's wrong in this thread. People like you trying to dictate that only one action here was in following with our character when practically ALL OF THEM are put into context by a competent GM.

So if you don't trust Deculture to make this work, maybe find another quest.

>Full retard option.

I agreed with the idea of only apologising for not calling her. I wanted us to be nicer about it, but we're not married to Iori and we shouldn't be encouraging the idea we're in a relationship.

Now we fucked up by being so blunt, but going back on the decision would have been worse. The best option is to rebuild from the ground up into a healthy relationship.

Not really seeing how this whole thing is people purposefully fucking things up. We had good reasons to do what we did. Those actions were then played out to our abilities and we sort of messed up, it's not the end of the world, but I don't get why we have to perfectly navigate the quest.

They weren't bad options and made sense within the context of what happened to us. Tired of people ignoring the idea that all our decisions can be reasoned in character and distancing ourselves isn't only linked to breaking from Iori entirely, half of us just want to fix the relationship from the broken mess it's currently at.

So how about we stop with the 'your choice is attempting to ruin things for everyone'. It wouldn't be there if it was.

I'm starting to notice people haven't actually read most of the 100 post shitfest that happened before Deculture posted the choice. We got a pretty good balance of the whole thing in the end, not completely in line with the end decision people started to agree on, but roughly approximating the idea based on our poor social skills (which were stated at the start of the fucking thread).

Maybe a small portion of people are actively trying to get rid of Iori, most people just want to set the situation straight and draw a line. We're mostly getting moderate decisions made. Insulting people who want to deal with this professionally is pretty immature, only a small number of people are even suggesting complete isolation, but the idea of getting some breathing room isn't a bad idea. She's been getting very clingy, it's not good for either of us. Better to have a more normal relationship instead of a twisted one.

Now I'm tired of people getting upset over supposed 'intent' of questers. This works both ways and I'd rather we just make our points over the merits of the decision. I don't think there were that many people voting for this outcome who did it for retarded reasons. I think you guys are just mad it didn't go how you wanted it.

We are terrible with people skills because we are broken not because we have spaghetti issues every time we speak to someone, we managed to do very well while still mostly grunting at people. Not really, though please do tell me what the GM actually thought and not what some NPC thought based on their own sensibilities.

Some of us don't think these were terrible options. Perhaps they aren't 'optimal' solutions but they fit what we're trying to roleplay. Sometimes more people want to be nice and attempt social side of our emerging personality, that's fine and when the concensus is to do that then we have to accept it.

Then some people reasonably want to try and be more profession, they feel we've gotten too deep with Iori and at the very least needed to redefine our position. Nothing is broken beyond all doubt, later choices can come back to it, but I think that sticking to this is better then trying to run back and make our we're sorry (after we mind raped the girl who almost got her hurt). We're taking control and it does fit Chiaki's personality so far.

People have thrown around the idea that we're throwing away character development. Climb a wall of dicks. This is part of her character too, sometimes making bad decisions (we might not even see them as bad) is part of that. Our character is determined by our choices and so far Deculture has done a good job of putting it in context.

Now sure, you might get a vibe of 'oh consquences' but I think there is nothing wrong with that. We made our bed, we lie in it. We don't try and snivel back now we've been warned. That's freedom.

Now I'm not saying you have to accept it was a good decision. What I want is for you guys to stop assuming bad faith on MOST THE QUEST. I'm pretty sure if we were destroying the quest even Deculture would stop and say OOC. Everything up to now fits the plot we've got. Let's run with it and stop whining.

It's generally accepted that we, as Chiaki aren't empathising well nor are we very good at socialising. Most of the posts before the 'apology' were basically saying we should apologise for not contacting her because we are friends and it was a dick move not to call her.

Deculture took this through our filter and Chiaki fell on her professional view and we got the message out that we're willing to be friends, but then made a huge point about how we're her body guard first.

Point is, we're not exactly some great social decision making machine here. Fabola even pointed it out afterwards and because we were upset we lashed out. Now it's been done though, we're sticking to it. Perhaps we can say a message to explain we really should have called her and feel bad about that. It wouldn't go against what we said much.

Things are fixable, but it's worth thinking we weren't in the best of moods either so we overlooked Iori's circumstances.

Now you guys complain that it's against her development to suddenly relapse into professionalism when we've been getting used to people, but that happens under stress sometimes. As someone said this'll test Iori's character on how dedicated she is to us.

Depending on which Chiaki you want, this was either a bad call we need to fix later, or a tough call that was a long time coming.

I think it's unreasonable to expect everyone to agree to your reasoning. Both sides have strong arguments. Resorting to insults just makes more shitstorms.

It won't be long before this likely happens from the opposite end when someone opts for romance in a arguably poor moment. Better we respect one another then fling shit everywhere like kids.

But now is trying to fix that. She WANTS to be Chiaki. She keeps telling people to call her Chiaki. Especially after Kirika showed her where the Murderface path led.

The thing is, she's GOOD at being Murderface, because she's been doing it for so long it's what she falls back into when she gets stressed. Because Murderface doesn't feel fear. Or stress. Or conflicting emotions. It's EASY to be Murderface.

But that's not Chiaki. And that's not who Chiaki seems to want to be. And she has no practice being Chiaki. She's actually quite bad at it.

Mainly by understanding others feelings so that we can apply them to try and make ourselves less of a wreck

We have shown before we understand when we should apologize and when someone is upset hell we did it not even hours before with Sayaka and Kyoko.

And yet with the one person who she should be careful with, the one person who she would tread on eggshells because she knows how much more emotional and emotionally fragile she is we decide to throw it all out the window.

Didn't we just finish talking to one of our friends whose back they broke because they joined us on our mission?

Just sayian it's not as simple as making the perfect call. Now people might have made this call because they want space from Iori, or because they think it'll help in the long run, maybe they want to save Iori... it's all up there in the air.

But we can easily put all of it into context for our character. Nothing bad has happened to the quest here aside from 300+ posts complaining about what everyone else wants.

How about next time we have to discuss this, we post our decision and reasoning, then any further posts arguing we delete AFTER deculture has posted. Or just not constantly call everyone out on their 'faction' or intent.

To be fair, that's not an unreasonable reaction from someone who hasn't slept in 8 hours straight and has had to deal with bloodthirsters and crazy murder harems. And having to constantly re-invent herself every so often, while not having any constants in her life aside from pills and booze and mutant cats.

I think that things will be very interesting from a narrative standpoint when the Siberia mission ends and the 'regular' workflow begins again. As some people have pointed out, there's some room for very meaningful character development and PLENTY of room for tragedy.

In retrospect, we should have considered the fact that they were less goofy extradimensional aliens that could offer us unique services... and more of a singular, hedonistic and chaotic entity that wants to move the entirety of itself into real space. Or that in its native universe, there were races around who made it their business to contain and deal with such entities.

I agree, it's just that I feel the recent choices did not show Chiaki trying hard enough to be Chiaki, rather than Murderface.

>Didn't we just finish talking to one of our friends whose back they broke because they joined us on our mission?
Yes we did, and we put forth as much effort as Chiaki could to make sure not to screw that up, even with Sayaka being obviously hostile.
I'm just saying that I think we could have tried to be a little more tactful, because we have some tact now. Mami lent us some.

Again that is just Tuesday as far as chiaki is concerned.

On any normal person it would be understandable but we are going from a semi lich alcoholic drug addicted magical girl who is trying to be a lot better and is used to not sleeping as much as falling into a coma.

Also the Orz were just the fluffy tail done perfectly, some of us in the early threads knew that Orz weren't a good thing but they were just too useful and fun to not take.
Personally I thought they might betray us earlier but the wait made it perfect since it allowed them to rape us so thoroughly

Some people might complain about rubberband difficulty, in regards to the Void Engineers.
But really, it's our fault for not smacking them down when all they had were some primitive nukes when we had the chance.
Now, they've assimilated TSAB magitech and WH40k tech into their ships. And if we don't kill them all in one go, they'll just adapt and assimilate our tech as well.

What exactly are you defining as turning out right versus turning out wrong?
Because if it's 'Chiaki comes back to an emotionally fragile Iori, tries to rebuild their friendship', then you'll have people saying that's the wrong way to go and we need to cut all connections with Iori.
And if it turns out that Iori either dies, turns into a puella, or simply doesn't want to restore her friendship with Iori, then there will be others who will say that their prediction that this was a bad option have been vindicated.

If you set your bar so low that simply moving the plot forward is considered a win, or that actions have consequences, then it's pretty easy to win, isn't it?

It just seems that there's little motivation to achieve success or avoid failure if you are unconcerned with the result as long as there is a result.

Reading this thread after the fact it is the first thread that leaves me depressed for the future of this quest. I don't mind Chiaki's actions and I think they can turn out good for the story but the impression I get of the mentality of a lot of voters does dampen my optimism.

It's much the same as I'm seeing in SWQ which I'm reading up on in the archives, the harsh kneejerk reactions the likes of "She's being irrational: Fuck her with a rake.". This is not only on behalf of the people who want to distance MC from Iori, I'm just too drunk to bother coming up with examples for every side.

am I the only one who doesn't care about my specific preferences and just want a good story? Fuck! every quest turns into preference-wars.
I have faith in Deculture, he's impressed me with his ability to make a compelling story out of the normal ADHD nature of quest votes but I know I won't be comfortable about this until I've gotten a feel for how he handles this in the next thread.

I love you, /tg/, and I hate you so very, very much.

>am I the only one who doesn't care about my specific preferences and just want a good story
If that's all you want, then just read a book.
The fact that a quest, just like any other PnP game, has choices, means that players have to choose and create the story along the way.
Of course preferences are going to come up; otherwise, why make a choice?
And then some people will want to succeed while going for a goal, while others will just want to pick the most disastrous choice just to see what happens.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and you can't remember the last time you cried.

It's not like you're even crying right now. You're not. It's just that you don't really remember when exactly was the last time you did, and why. Of course, you're not asking yourself these questions for any particular reason - it's just one of those times that you wonder just how much you've forgotten, how much you actually remember, and how much of what you DO remember is nothing but wishful thinking and fevered, half-coherent dreaming. Both borne out of alcohol and painkiller abuse.

>>20070632

You take your glasses off, furiously rub your costume's sleeve across your eyes, and grumble a curse underneath your breath - the cigarette you've been hurriedly reducing to ash only a few seconds ago all but spent down to its filter.

It's not even lit anymore, what little left of the embers having died out moments ago. Normally, you'd have followed up long before such a thing could happen with another cigarette, but you just don't feel like it. Not right now.

...Christ. Just how pitiful can you actually get? You're supposed to be above crap like this. You're Murderface. THE Murderface, if Midori's drunken fangirl ruminations are to actually be believed. You're supposed to be cold, calm, collected, a dyed-in-the-wool killer. Methodical. Thorough. The kind of person that, when handed a particular firearm, would immediately ask about the little blinking button at the bottom of the gun.

You should not be this bothered about making a Principal cry. Because that's all Minase Iori is to you. A principal. Nothing else.

"Sempai!" Midori's voice carries through the noise of the city streaming through the open window of your car. You glance to the side, and see Midori emerging from the convenience store she had asked you to stop momentarily beside. All smiles, she lifts a plastic bag, the contents within slick with cold sweat, clinking together with the movement. "I bought drinks!"

You grunt in response and motion for her to get in. You're still on the clock, and the both of you need to pick up Misaka before the flight.

Midori immediately does so, closing the door behind her with a snap, bouncing lightly in her seat as she buckles herself in. A moment more, and you find a can of lemon soda being thrust in front of your face, its surface bedewed with condensation.

"Something to wet your throat, Matsuda-sempai." Midori says, before smiling awkwardly. "I'd have bought you One Cup Ozeki, but you are driving, after all..."

That's fine, you murmur. You're not interested in drinking and driving. After all that you've survived, death by wrapping your car around a steel post at a hundred miles per hour is a significantly ignoble way to die. You pull out the car's drink holder, place the unopened can into one of the slots, and then get the vehicle moving again, into the main road.

You hear a metal snapping sound, followed by a hiss of air, as your subordinate starts on her own drink. Some sort of blackcurrant soda, by the looks of it. Non-alcoholic too.

"S-so, um...what happened back there, sempai? Can I ask, at least?" Midori says after a moment, turning towards you. You don't have to look at her to know that she's concerned.

How do you respond?

You summarize the events that had taken place in the dining hall of the Lovelace Residence in three words, and dismiss her concern for you in four - keeping your eyes firmly on the road.

The warehouse district, that's where you're going. Misaka would be thrilled to know that you'll be carting her away from her pet projects and to a barren, snow-buried wasteland to hunt bears and talk shop with the most reclusive members of the Officio.

"...If you say so, Matsuda-sempai." Midori says after a moment, seemingly getting the hint. "I just wondered if...if maybe you wanted someone to talk about it with." She takes a sip from her canned beverage. "There's really nothing bad about keeping it to yourself, but it's definitely better if you have someone to just vent to, you know?" She turns towards you, a small smile on her face. "Maybe if you did, you wouldn't need to drink so much, Sempai."

Yes. That's a thought. That's a very good thought, and you would probably consider it in the near future, when you've imbibed enough of the Good Sir Kong's nightly restorative and ye olde Interfectum pain-deadening powder pills. That way, you can forget it just as easily as you can forget your name.

"...Sempai." Midori looks at you, hurt. "I was just trying to help."

And you'll ask for her help when you need it. Now you just need to get to Misaka's warehouse without crashing into something. Like a fuel truck or a currently-occupied pedestrian lane.

Midori is drilling her for the full gamut of the Murderface experience, like we told her to... just not for the reasons Chiaki might be expecting.

I can easily see, if she survives the scenario and if Chiaki ever kicks the bucket, Midori will be using her power of Illusion to create Illisuatory Murderface, and terrorize her targets into giving up by playing on Chiaki's reputation. The whole 'Rumors of my death are greatly exaggerated' bit.

I agree. We should be a bit careful about what we say to Midori...until she proves herself. Her hero-worship of our Murderface persona could be sincere but it could be an act as well. Plus she was assigned to helping the otaku in their attempted rape of Minase Iori.

Midori is acting too femme-fatale-ish for my tastes right now, so confiding in her at the moment is not a good idea. She should know only what we want her to know until she's proven herself trustworthy.

It's what Rick Deckard and Philip Marlowe would do.

She was obviously low tier and probably gets handed a job and told to take it or take a bullet.

Wait, we left her in the car and she didn't pass out, when we came back she was leaning on the outside of the car.

There's a fair chance that we've already given the soul gem back to her. Be brisk if you want guys, but there's no need to be outright malevolent towards her. We've already decided that we're sticking to professional for now. We might get as far as friends, but not for now.

Regarding Midori and our powers over her, QB said we could not only kill her, but also take control of her, IIRC. So maybe we could try that later, to get used to the whole subordinate soul gem stuff.

She turns away from you, looking out the window. Never once looking back at you as you continue to drive.

You're getting pretty good at this, you realize. Just ruining everyone's day. You should probably switch to Culexus rank, you could probably give those girls pointers.

The rest of the trip to Warehouse #0069 continues in silence. Your lemon soda left unopened, left to go room temperature without even a sip.

You leave it there on the holder as you finally bring the car into a stop in front of Misaka's warehouse. The gates already open at your arrival, the rolling shutters drawn up to let the sunlight in, revealing the sort of technological heresies your arms dealer is somehow always ass-deep in.

"Murderface! Ah, Murderface!" Misaka, all smiles, comes running out from the depths of the warehouse - followed by the ground-shaking, ponderous footsteps of the armored giant that had contributed greatly in your last assignment. You finally manage a sincere smile - it's hard not to be able to do so, not with someone like Misaka being so happy just seeing you arrive. In her greasy work overalls, she throws her arms around your waist, nuzzling your stomach. You know your costume is getting dirty in the process, but it's not like you give a damn.

"Tiny Pete told Misaka everything!" Misaka says as she steps back, grinning up at you. "Well, not really tell, but report with video feed was enough! Misaka saw the huge monster he fought for Murderface, a-and how Murderface saved him with impeccable choice of rifle! BOOM!" She's not normally this giddy, but you nod, letting her continue. "Well, is a shame about the repairs, but is easy to fix! Will just take time!"

I am just stating what it very clearly appears to be.
Even if she dream landed us now we can kill her with a thought.

Kyuubey also has a kill switch for her (he wouldn't not have one) and honestly Midori knows she is fucked at this point. She is being such a fan girl on us because she realizes she can't go back to her incubator because she failed and is compromised, she can't trust kyuubey because he obviously doesn't care about her one way or the other and would kill her just to save himself some time.

She has one hope and that is that Chiaki finds her worth keeping around. Unless she is further gone than Kirika was I really doubt she is going to do a face heel turn the moment she gets her gem back.

Maybe some very fucking creepy stalkerish things but nothing to make us kill her outright

Maybe Midori's rank of Callidus is less due to her power level and more a reflection of the powers / power level of her former co-workers? It would seem the Offico is staffed with a lot of Combat specialists, with Chiaki being the top gun user, and Kirika formerly the best swords woman, leaving Kyoko in the number 2 position.

So, perhaps she's less powerful than someone else in her old office, but her abilities are great in comparison with what we in the O. A. have.

"Hey, Matsuda-sempai, what's that--" Midori finally breaks her sullen silence as she steps up behind you, before her eyes go impossibly wide at the giant Terminator lumbering up from behind Misaka - and shrieks as she cowers behind you. "S-SEMPAI, A MONSTER--!"

"Eh?" Misaka blinks, before frowning. "Stupid girl, Tiny Pete is not monster! Tiny Pete is good friend! Big and spiky, maybe, and sometimes he talks about setting Imperium on fire and consigning the Corpse Emperor to oblivion, but that makes him better, in Misaka's opinion!"

You look over at Tiny Pete as he comes to a stop behind Misaka. The Terminator is still in bad shape - his right arm is still detached, a souvenir from Kilgore - but you can see that you interrupted Misaka in the middle of repairs. Already you can see that she'd put in new trunking and wiring into the ones that had been ripped apart during their battle, and both of the elephantine helm's eyes are glowing red. One of the tusks are still broken, though, but you figure it gives it more of a hardcore look. More metal, more brutal.

"T-Tiny Pete? You're calling THAT Tiny Pete?" Midori squeaks from behind you, slowly crawling out of cover. "Are you just trying to give him an ironic name or something? Because he's not tiny at all!"

"Shut up! It is perfect name! Silence!" Your arms dealer stomps one foot on the ground, petulant, before holding out one hand towards Midori. "Just activated force field! Only Misaka and Murderface can talk now!"

"Force field?" Midori blinks at this. "What the--"

Midori's power seems pretty strong, but she is classified as 'low tier' because there are not many applications for her power. We as players recognised that we could do a few neat tricks with her, and so we adopted her as an underling. Just because the incubators are too blind to see the use of an illusionist doesn't mean that we have to as well. We want her to help us, and that means that eventually we're going to have to trust her, whether you personally like it or not.

As the other anon said, if you can't trust her, you should have voted to not take responsability for her when we were given the choice. As it stands, you have to work with the descision that was made in that thread, at least until another choice point in the future.

Now can we all please stop arguing about things we can't change, and talk about things that we can? Please?

You tell her that it was just a small misunderstanding with the Pretty Idol Girl, and that you're sure it'll work itself out soon. She doesn't seem to buy it, however, pouting up at you, her brow furrowed in concern - an expression that would have probably reduced anyone else into butter, but not you. Because you remember how to deal with it.

You reach down with one hand and pat her on the head. Once. Letting your hand rest on her soft, silky brown hair.

Her expression softens briefly, before re-establishing it again with a small grunt.

You give her another pat, a bit more affectionate this time, giving her hair a ruffle this time. The pout dissolves, her expression smoothens, and she looks up at you with wide eyes, mouth half-open.

You pat her another time, this time making it a solidly affectionate one, even deigning to brush a few strands of hair away from her eyes - and it's then that she beams up at you, cheeks coloring slightly, giggling.

"Wow, Matsuda-sempai." Midori says, deadpan, a smirk on her face, her arms crossed under her chest. "You're not bad with kids. Are you sure you're as hardcore as you let on? Maybe you should work part-time in a daycare."

You keep the smile on your face as you tell her to shut up, which does completely nothing to stop her smirk from evolving into a grin. You make a mental note to tell her about proper decorum around Misaka later, before finally giving your own arms dealer the thanks she so richly deserves.

Yes. Lots of things to do with Midori.

1) Ask about her past.
2) Ask about Pinky. Warn her.
3) Tell her about golden weapons. Ask if she remembers anyone from her past agency with one.
4) Tell her about our social circle and how to behave around then. Maybe warn her about Iori?
5) Test the soulgem takeover function, the one that lets us control her.
6) Figure out teamwork tactics.
7) Ask why she likes us. Ask about Murderface gossip in general. It'll be good to know what other magical girls will first think when hearing about us.
8) Try to build some trust in general. Maybe with nightly drinking sessions.

You keep the smile on your face as you tell her to shut up, which does completely nothing to stop her smirk from evolving into a grin. You make a mental note to tell her about proper decorum around Misaka later, before finally giving your own arms dealer the thanks she so richly deserves.

"Misaka was waiting for you to remember." She's always said this. As if she knew, somehow, that you forget things on occasion. Through no fault of your own, of course - but she does it regularly enough that you think there's something to it. "Misaka is a good girl, yes? A good girl."

Misaka is, indeed. A very good girl.

It's then that you finally breach the subject that you've traveled all the way across the city to - that being your upcoming 'sabbatical' in Siberia, and that you would like for her to come with you. It's here that her face lights up, her eyes opening, staring up at you with something akin to rapt worship. The only time she'd given you that look was when you had Tiny Pete wheeled into her warehouse, all fresh from wherever your Shield had pulled it from.

"Siberia? Murderface wants to take Misaka on vacation trip to Siberia?" The auburn-haired girl has stars in her eyes as she grabs at your hands. "H-have not seen Siberia for a long time...o-older brother is there, working in mysterious Research and Development building! T-this is perfect time to visit! Yes! Yes, will go with you! Misaka is yours!"

Older brother? She has an older brother?

"Of course! Misaka has good, dependable older brother - but that is now!" The arms dealer grins. "Well, back then, he was, ah, how you say, very unreliable! Only played games and watched anime! Does not even like drinking vodka, liked Ramune instead! Buying pillows with weird pictures on them, too!"

"Sounds like my ex-boyfriend," You hear Midori murmur as she warily steps up in front of Tiny Pete. "Whoa, this is some serious spikage there, fella. Hey, what are you doing for dinner?"

"No flirting with Tiny Pete! He is one-woman machine!" Misaka snaps at your subordinate, before pouting back up at you again. "Murderface! Who is girl with green hair? Is she replacement for Pretty Idol Girl?!"

"N-no. I'm not replacing anyone." You manage to say, shaking your head. "She's my...junior, Misaka. Her name is Hanegawa Midori."

"Green." Misaka says in withering tones. "Reminds Misaka of vegetables. Misaka already hates!"

You pat her on the head again, trying to improve her mood. It's cute, of course, but having your arms dealer have a hate-on for your junior isn't going to smoothen the mission workflow.

"Don't worry about Midori. She's alright." You tell Misaka this, who pouts at you skeptically - at the same time, your subordinate turns to look at you, her face lighting up at your compliment. You try your level best to ignore this, giving the arms dealer another pat on the head for good measure.

"W-well, just see to it that she does not break anything! Misaka is watching you, Green!"

Midori holds up both her hands in mock surrender. "O-okay, okay. I won't touch anything. I promise."

Misaka seems to accept that for now, and it's then that you come to a decision. You turn towards Midori and tell her that for the duration of the trip - and whenever they're in the same room together - she is to consider Misaka's authority as your own, and she is to follow the arms dealer's orders as if you yourself had uttered them. Within reason, of course - if Misaka orders her to, say, make a naked snow angel outdoors, she is not to do that.

"HEY!" Misaka frowns up at you. "Misaka did not actually know Kyoko would do something like that! Misaka did not know she was drunk then!"

You nod. Of course. It was still funny as hell, but that didn't make any less right.

"...Sure. I can dig it." Midori says after a moment, shrugging. "Understood, Matsuda-sempai. Follow the runt, except when she tells me to do something that may freeze my tits off."

Right. Well, at least you know that she's getting used to the being a subordinate thing. You tell them that if they get along especially well, you'll give them some treats. Or something.

"Treats? Matsuda-sempai, I'm not--" Midori starts, but Misaka seems to be taken with the idea. She beams her assent to this proposition, cutting Midori off.

You then ask Misaka about Tiny Pete's repairs. You're a bit worried about the big guy, especially when he practically tanked Kilgore for you until he could tank no more.

"Oh! Well, um, repairs is going fine! See, Misaka is already halfway done! Servos in arm have been reconstructed, just need to reconnect cabling and reattach arm!" Misaka gestures to the new trunking of Tiny Pete's arm, when it once had been bare, sparking wire. "Also, teleportation function still okay! First time was good test, and I am sure second, third time will be good! Just need to make fine-tune adjustments, so that Tiny Pete lands beside teleportation beacon, not on! Haha!"

Yes. That's...important. Very important.

"Oh! Oh! Almost forgot!" Misaka says as she breaks off from you, running towards Tiny Pete - the Terminator tracking the young girl, its helm swiveling to follow her movements as she comes up behind him. "Misaka has developed AI further! Now Misaka can calibrate so that he is coded to follow Murderface's command only!"

A really spiky gentleman.

"Here we go!" Misaka crows as she pushes a button, and the Terminator's eyes flash once, before focusing on you and you alone.

"RANKING OFFICER RECOGNIZED. CAPTAIN MURDERFACE." The armored giant's speaker-corrupted voice, you note, has already been set to a lower volume, but it still makes your ears ring - and Midori squeaks as she covers her ears. "STANDING READY FOR ORDERS."

"Of course, Misaka still has administrator control," Misaka says as she jumps down from Tiny Pete's shoulders. "But this way, no one can hijack control from Murderface when in combat zone!"

You know, maybe you should just hire Misaka as your personal everything.

"Wait, this thing is going to actually fight for us? Tiny Pete is going into combat zones with us?" Midori's eyes are wide as you hold out a fist to the Terminator - who, after examining your gesture for a good long while, extends its own remaining arm, its massive fist bumping gently into yours.

You nod in affirmation, and Midori whistles.

"That...that's awesome. Seriously. I would pay big money to see Tiny Pete stomp on a few Pleiades Saint skulls." She gives you a grin. "All the money in the world."

"Tiny Pete does't need to," Misaka shakes her head, pouting once more - but at least she's not snapping at your subordinate anymore. "Once Misaka gets Tiny Pete's Heavy Bolter attachment calibrated, Tiny Pete will not need to do that kind of stuff!"

You shake your head at the both of them, before giving Misaka a friendly reminder that you need to be at the Airport before your flight. Misaka nods at this, and runs back inside her warehouse, obviously to pack.

"Nice kid," Midori says after a moment, seemingly finally relaxed after...well, after everything. "A bit bratty, though, but I can tell it's probably just her being suspicious of me. Just like everyone I'm going to be working for and with, which isn't really okay, but at least I'm still alive to do it. Right, Matsuda-sempai?"

You blink at this rather surprising burst of awareness from Midori. You can only nod in response. She grins at you - you must look really confused right now.

"What? Matsuda-sempai, I'm not an idiot. I mean, I'm from a completely different agency. I made my contract with another Incubator, and now I'm here, and the only thing you're banking on my being loyal, besides my gratitude - which you have - is my not wanting to be dead. I would be suspicious of myself, if I was in your position."

She lets out a sigh.

"Just...I want to tell you that I don't plan on stabbing you in the back, but you really have no reason to believe me." Midori looks at you, her crimson eyes pleading. "So I'm just going to say that I want to be able to help you out in assignments, but not be treated like I'm some sort of super liability that's going to switch sides at the drop of a hat, you know?"

"Well, I won't mind if they can't look at me properly. But can I at least ask my Sempai to trust me?"

How do you react?

After a moment, you reach out and take her hand, clasping it with your own. You understand, at least, just how hard it was for her to come out and say something like that, and it's not like you gave her the easiest time in the world to find an opportunity to. You tell her that you want to trust her, despite trust being hard to come by these days - you're not so sure you trust yourself, at that.

She blinks at this, before giving your hand a friendly squeeze.

"Well, I trust you, Matsuda-sempai." She says with a smile. Not a grin, not some polite stretching of the lips, a smile. "I actually feel better that you've got a killswitch on me. At the very least, my life is in the hands of someone who won't kill me - unless it's for a very good reason. And that's enough for me."

You blink at this, and you feel your cheeks heat up for some reason. You only manage to nod, before letting go of her hand. After a moment, you tell her to go into the warehouse, see if Misaka needs help.

Someone willingly trusting you with their life? You shake your head.

Mom, Dad and the Family,

How are things back home? I hope my continued absence hasn't hurt business much.

Work has been swell so far. I don't think it's possible to expand into Japan, but there's a massive organized crime presence. They're not very forthcoming, but I think they're open to collaboration. It's all very exciting.

Japan is a very strange place. And I seem to be getting into even stranger places. My current "employer" has sent me on some strange assignments. He pays well, though, but I'd rather be back home. At least there's no crazy demons. Just good old crime and none of this magic business.

I've met a really nice girl here. I think you all might like her. She's pretty, graceful and, uh, actually, I'm not too sure if I should describe further. I'll bring her home one of these days.

I'll be in Siberia for some time. It would be nice to meet some family there.

I gotta go. I'll write more next time.

I quite enjoy talking to you. It’s quite rare to find someone my age liking Kamen Rider and all. Most people usually outgrow them. I’ll be happy to lend you my Kamen Rider Amazon DVDs, but you gotta return the Stronger DVDs you loaned from me. It wasn’t easy sneaking that into the hospital, you know. And being forced to watch Fourze is quite the torture. I still can’t believe you like that.

How are you coping? That Kilgore thing was really horrible. I’m glad you’re not hurt. Though it’s strange of me to care for a client so much.

Number one. I sincerely apologize for the hurt I’ve caused you.

Number two. We may have been together for a short time, but my feelings for you have not changed.

I loved the lunch. But more importantly, I love that you came to visit me, even though you are busy with work and all.

I think you should go choke on a barrel of dicks or learn to write something entertaining.

The reason people liked writefagging in the SWQ threads is because it was distanced from the main characters (mostly) and it was entertaining, the few exceptions were things like kotters incest chicken story which was horrible fapfiction given life and made somewhat funny along the way.

That is just my opinion though.

Yeah, really want to be an actual rivalry that could be in the real world in some way.

How common would they have ties?

I just had an idea. We're not always around Misaka, so that means for all we know the two could always have their rivalry going. Yes, despite intercontinental.

for an amusing idea, Misaka recruits us for help, and in reaction the German recruits Midori.
They go less lethal due to having more people in, though.

And would the two actively trade research and ideas as friends?

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

Two years ago, you were a Magical Girl. You're at the top of your rank. You've managed to earn enough to get a rather luxurious apartment at the city's upscale district, as well as a very nice motorcycle you only ride when you're positive no one you know is looking. You've already filled two display cases full of medals and awards that generally mean little to anyone else that would see them, but for those in the know, they're tangible proof that you're the best at what you do. And they absolutely adore you for it.

You can also make a very mean plate of pancakes.

At least, that's what you've been told, by the blue-haired girl with the bad temper that you'd served breakfast on a whim (she was bringing in your sealed dossier). In the breaths she could spare while greedily wolfing them down - she had told you that they were the best thing she'd ever tasted, and she would kill for another stack.

"Oh my God, this is good. This is like...this is like so good, Mami-san. I can't stop eating," she exulted, her mouth full. That's very kind of her to say, and you tell her so, giving her the smile that you rarely show anyone else - and she positively crimsoned at it, before hunkering back down to continue destroying her first stack.

You were in the middle of making her a new batch when your cellphone started to vibrate, buzzing slightly in your bathrobe's pocket.

What did you do?

[]You answered it, wondering who could it be this early.
[]You hung and turned your cellphone off. Making pancakes require uninterrupted focus to be perfect.

In a nutshell: A witch is a fallen magical girl. If a magical girl does not cleanse her soul gem, or if she feels too much despair at once, it will go black and shatter, turning her into a witch. A witch is monster that feeds on despair by psychically driving people to suicide.

That's right, you answered the phone. It's impolite, of course, to simply hang up without giving the person on the other end of the line a fair listen - and their calling you at that hour would mean that it was important enough.

It's not like you're bad at multitasking. You're pretty good at it. Being able to shoot a meter-long rifle of ivory and steel that weighs four kilograms with one hand into a hostile fifty meters away while slapping the life out of another hostile using yet ANOTHER rifle with your other hand is something you do on a regular basis. Making pancakes while answering a call? More or less the same thing, except much, much easier. And you're just in your bath robe.

You give the very last pancake a deft, expert flip, before sliding the plate you've been making a nice healthy stack on under it - and the airborne delight neatly lands on top of its fluffy, feather-light brothers and sisters. At the very same time, you fish your cellphone out from your pocket with your other, flipping it open with a flick of your wrist, and holding it up to your ear.

You greet the caller hello, adding a good morning just before they could answer. Nothing wrong with making sure they have a nice start to their day, right?

"Mami Tomoe, this is Kyuubey." Ah, it's Kyuubey, performing the usual dossier arrival check. "Has Miki Sayaka arrived with your dossier?"

You reply to the affirmative, a small smile on your face as you do so. Sayaka had certainly arrived in time - in fact, she woke you up. The dossier in her hands still sealed, its confidentiality unbreached. He doesn't need to worry about anything.

"Excellent." You hear some whispering on the background. "Now, I called to alert you about a reading we picked up a few hours earlier - it seems that there's a Witch gestating a few blocks away from your location. It seems to be dormant for now, but there has been reports of theft in the area that's decidedly strange in nature. All that keeps being stolen are wheels or blocks of cheese."

Cheese. That's...strange, but it does certainly sound like Witch behavior. Besides making victims out of innocent bystanders, Witches often steal certain objects that remind them of their past selves, as if trying to remind themselves of what they once were with tangible keepsakes.

"We've decided to identify it as the Witch Charlotte. Like I said, it's dormant for now, but the fact that it's out there stealing food means that either it already can create familiars to do the stealing for it, or the dormancy is in fact just temporary hibernation. In any case, I'd like for this one to be done away with before it takes a victim. Will you take this assignment, then, Tomoe Mami? I can just as easily assign it to another nearby unit."

You turn the stove off with a turn of one of its knobs. Pancake making will have to wait, at least for now.

What did you do?

[]You took up the assignment, of course. Why would you even consider NOT doing it? You weren't going to wait for someone to get hurt before you took action.

I myself feel the reason Mami got her head chomped was that she was distracted by a gigantic fucking clown worm coming outta nowhere.

Distracted by friendship would be like, if, she was looking at Madoka at the time or laughing and giggling then got side shotted by a flank attack, but this was something directly in front of her.

You took up the assignment without hesitation. Without even a second thought. You didn't even let Kyuubey finish his sentence. Why would you even consider standing by doing nothing? Sure, you already have an assignment right now, and you're rather comfortable wearing nothing but your bathrobe and underwear - but how could you enjoy that, when someone could get hurt while you idly made pancakes in your kitchen?

"Very good, Tomoe Mami. I knew I could depend on you." Kyuubey replies over the phone, and while you can never really tell with the furry little creature, you think you could hear a note of relief in his voice. "The entrance to the Witch's Barrier is near Apartment Building 3A's bike stand, four blocks from your location. You should be able to enter it easily, just take care not to get noticed."

You reply your assent, and you make to end the call when he suddenly speaks up, again.

"...Take Miki Sayaka with you."

You blink at this, and carefully ask why.

"Well, just in case. I know this purging should be relatively trivial for you, but you can never really tell with Witches. Just as a precaution." More whispering. "Besides, this can help Sayaka work off some steam. She's...had a few outbursts at work, lately."

Ah. Yes, of course. That's very wise of the Incubator. You say so, making sure to thank him for his concern. The Incubator clears his throat, as if somewhat taken aback by your compliment and gratitude.

"I'm just trying to make sure my agents don't go blindly into such things without taking everything into consideration, that's all." Was it your imagination, or did Kyuubey just sound bashful, just then?

"In any case. Is there anything else you'd like to ask, Mami Tomoe? If not, then please accomplish this assignment the best you can."

You did have something to ask then. You were well aware of the fact that, whenever a Witch was involved, time has always been of the essence - but something had been bothering you for quite a while, to the point that you've lost sleep over it.

You had waited until Sayaka had started on her new stack of pancakes. The blue-haired girl smiling up at you with clear adoration on her face, bits of pancake at her cheeks - and you remember absently plucking a crumb from the corner of her lips and then licking it off your finger. You didn't see her crimson further at the gesture, because you were already heading back to your room to get dressed.

You murmur the question furtively to Kyuubey, in the hopes that Sayaka wouldn't hear.

"Ah. About that." Kyuubey is silent for a moment. "Well, from your readings, your levels have already normalized. No fluctuations, not like the last time. And your eyes have reverted to their normal color, correct?"

You say yes after looking closely in your dresser's mirror. Yellow irises, white sclera, and not a wrinkle on your face. Well, of course you don't have wrinkles - you're much too young to worry about that.

"Then what happened was a fluke, a one-time occurence. Nothing more. A temporary by-product of Witch exposure. You've had no relapses ever since that incident, so it's logical to assume that you will never have it again. Put it out of your head, Tomoe Mami, and focus on your assignments. People's lives are at stake, here, and they deserve your complete attention."

You thank him, and then apologize for being insistent. You were just worrying about nothing, it seems.

"Perfectly all right, Mami Tomoe. Rest assured that you will be the first to know should I detect any strange readings from your Soul Gem. In the meantime, I expect that you'll be able to carry out your tasks with a clear mind and a pure heart."

Of course. Of course, you'll be able to do that. You thank him again, and politely request the call to end.

"Very well. Good hunting, Tomoe Mami. Suffer not the Witch to live."

"Mami-san!" Sayaka calls from the kitchen. "I just got a message from Kyuubey! We're on a Witch run, together?"

You answer yes as you throw your closet open, revealing a tasteful selection of clothes. A Witch hunt, to be exact.

She dies in episode three for the timeline that the series runs in but she dies multiple times in prior timelines along with most of the cast.

The only one who survives them all is Homura because her wish allows her to go back to the start of the events leading to the end of the world.

She has apparently relived the same month long enough that she has seen many ways that everything went wrong and has been able to store something in the region of the entire worlds arsenal in her shield.

Her time travel doesn't just send her back though, each time she does it she is going to a new timeline into a new version body from the start point so she could have done it for years yet never aged.

You think they're under our control. That other guy thinks our bomb collar is "perfect" and is just itching to hang himself.

We don't have any other worries as of the this moment. We don't know anything about Russia(which we can fix my asking Misaka), the next golden weapon user, or have any idea how/when pink will next appear(Calling QB for new intel might help this. If we're lucky.)

The very issues you mentioned are ones we can and are dealing with
The golden weapons which we are going to Russia for, getting someone to make sure Iori doesn't do something stupid which should be as easy as a phone call to Mami and explaining that we did something utterly retarded and to keep an eye on her for us or god forbid even talking to her ourselves since we do have a phone and her number.

We can think outside the rails here as Deculture has shown he will let us in the past.

There, something we can talk about.

However, I said to ask about Russia. Asking Mami to drag her out if she tries to talk with QB might work, getting Richie rich in on it too would be best. Talking to her ourselves would be counter productive. We've made the line and I'd rather stick with it.

>> ☐ Anonymous 07/30/12(Mon)04:26 No.20098922

Not the guy you're talking to, but I see Iori as one issue we can attempt to handle.
Send her a text message that we should talk when Chiaki gets back from Siberia.
Second, we can still get information about other potential Golden Weapon users by asking Midori if any in her agency had them.

Also, you say to not trust her, but if we don't trust her and reject her attempts to gain our trust, then there's never a reason for her to trust us, is there?

I think that we fucked it up royally and she misinterpreted it entirely so we should fix it.

We fell back on purely professional and idiotic which didn't address the problem she had in the first place but brushed it aside and all we have done since is had Deculture have everyone go on about how stupid that was.

The thing that annoys me the most of it all is we just went from a situation where we realized we needed to apologize and that we had hurt a friend then went right to the next person and stomped right over their feelings on the like the MC from SWQ when the players are in full pilot mode.

It annoys me because it is so stupidly back and forth that at this point everyone would be thinking that maybe murderface needs to be put in a straight jacket and every time we manage to do something towards making the character change from alcoholic one joke character it gets railroaded back there by idiots who think that the character shouldn't actually go beyond what it was handed to us as.

Asking about Midori teammates would be a good plan. Asking QB to send us his reports would be even better.

As for trusting Midori, we can be friendly to but up some camaraderie. We can let her help us. But when shit goes south in Russia I'd rather trust Misaka and Tiny Pete.

When get to the compromising situation where Midori can get free(or maybe worse) we'll see how the cards land. If she sticks with us I'd start to warm up to her.

I'll admit we didn't say it very well, but it's the course I wanted to go. Get Mami to stop her from signing up and we can apologise after Russia. Iori is not without fault there either.

The /K/ommandos are less of a group on their own, but a collection of people from other groups who place their differences aside to talk about dakka.

Many of the Glass Case of Emotions want to portray Chiaki as fundamentally damaged, emotionally speaking. She is trying to improve, trying to care, cutting down the drinking even, trying not to make people hate us, but she's well aware of the fact that she's a mess.

We have had a bit of a drop lately due to the influx of the massive piles of bickering and the piles of grimderpers.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

Two years ago, you were a Magical Girl. You've made a habit of establishing unbelievable records at the Officio Assassinorum - and breaking them, time and time again, without fail, without difficulty.

You don't bandy about that you're the best, even though everyone else insists on the fact. You know how to kill four men in three hits, and eight men in five. Once, you struck an enemy Magical Girl so hard with a double-handed rifle bash that the force of the impact tore most of her face off - just before it broke her skull open like a watermelon.

You also have the biggest bust size in the Officio.

>> ☐ Deculture 07/30/12(Mon)08:19 No.20100488

A witch run. The simplest and most common assignment a Magical Girl in the service of the Officio Assassinorum could ever be given. You're actually relieved that this dropped on your lap - you've had quite enough with the sort of tasks that you've been given. The last one, where you had to pretend to be a rather rotund politician's arm candy - that didn't turn out so well, or at least you thought so. No, it turned out to be a relatively peaceful night, but he kept pawing at you that you had to gently nudge him into one of the balconies and correct his behavior there when you were positive no one was looking.

You didn't do anything too drastic, of course. Sayaka would have probably broken a thumb. Kyoko would have dislocated his arm and then relocated it again, with a grin on her face.

You just set him straight by telling him that you're not interested, and that if he tried to grope you again, you would make sure that his wife would hear of his erroneous behavior. The wife who paid for his protection in the first place - and who could just as easily tell you to walk, and leave him alone for the invisible ninja assassins you were VERY sure that was hiding underneath the buffet table.

Twisting his arm behind him also helped driving the point home.

In any case, you had dressed yourself tastefully, if simply. A fluffy cream-colored turtleneck sweater, a simple black pencil skirt, stockings and black shoes. The mornings have become a bit chilly nowadays, so you made sure that you were amply...clothed, up top.

These things can be a problem, sometimes. Especially when you forget your brassiere.

You pretend not to notice, but the bounce whenever you walk is just much too vulgar.

Sayaka, still in her school uniform, meets you outside your apartment. You smile at her and apologize for taking much too long to get prepared. She hastily waves your apology away and tells you that she was alright with waiting. You give her another smile and lock up the apartment behind you, making sure that the locks are in place. A moment more of double-checking - you just want to be sure, after all - and you declare yourself ready to go.

"A-Ah. Alright, Mami-san. Let's blow that stupid Witch up and get back in time for tea!" Sayaka exclaims, smiling eagerly. You can tell she's excited - not like it's difficult to. You have always had this knack about reading people - kids especially, that's why you took up the part time job at a daycare. Reading adults are a bit more difficult, but kids you have no trouble with - and you're not too sure if it's a good thing or a bad thing that reading Sayaka is less of a challenge than trying to find out why a toddler's crying.

You tell her that while you're happy she's energetic, she should dial it down a bit. Witches, after all, aren't as predictable as - say, a gang of yakuza. They tend to do things that you fail to anticipate, even after you've fought their kind a thousand times. Each Witch is different, not a single one the same.

"Y-yeah. Of course, Mami-san." Sayaka couldn't nod quickly enough. "Just that...even if the look and flavor's different, they all end up the same, don't they?" She grips an invisible sword in front of her, and executing a series of graceful cuts, slashes an imaginary opponent to ribbons. "I mean, with Mami-san with me, there's no way we can possibly lose over some dumb Witch!"

You give a little sigh, smiling all the while. You hope it's not the case, but you feel that she desperately wants your approval. Which you've told her time and again that she has already earned - and you have insisted that she call you without a honorific. Two things that the blue-haired girl has stubbornly refused to understand.

Kids will be kids, you think as you get to the apartment elevator. Both of you standing side by side as you tap the button for the Ground Floor, the plastic square lighting up. The doors slide close in front of you.

"S-so, um...Mami-san, I heard you were dating someone...?"

You blink at this, your breath catching slightly in your throat. How did she find out? How did the Officio find out? You've been...careful! Very careful!

How did you respond?

That's right. You give her a small, embarrassed-looking smile, while discreetly trying to gauge just how much she knows through her body language. It's an easy enough skill to learn, but something you try not to abuse. Sure, it's quite efficient in trying to figure out if the person you're talking to is lying - or hiding injuries in an attempt to act tough in front of you - but sometimes, you've gotten too good at it that you feel like you're invading your colleagues' privacy. And that is quite the dreadful thing, really, so you swore to yourself not to do it unless it was quite the emergency.

This is one of those times, and as you easily frame the denial - and searching question - in a flippant way, softened by a smile, you notice with a rather cold start that she is doing the same thing to you, albeit in a less-than-subtle manner. Watching your reaction. Which means that she may know more than she's letting on, and is just trying to confirm it.

Well, that, or this is nothing but a fishing expedition.

It's then that she notices you looking at her - and immediately she colors, before looking away. "E-erm. Well. Just...just that I heard from some of the other girls. N-not that I believe them right away, of course, Mami-san!" She makes this clear, looking back at you, eyes wide. "Just...uh...if you are, t-then I'm really happy for you! I just...I just wish you told me, too, so that we could have...um. A party. Something to celebrate." Sayaka wrings her hands together. "T-that's what they do when your best friend has a boyfriend, right?" She smiles, uncertainly.

You return her smile, and then reach out to brush a few strands of hair from her eyes. You tell her that...well, you're not quite sure what to call what you have with that 'someone' just yet, if there is in fact someone. Sayaka blinks at this, and opens her mouth to say something - before you let your smile go wider as you take her hand and give it a squeeze. Silencing her by reassuring her that she will be the first to know if you've had everything figured out.

Sayaka blushes again, and nods. "I'll keep it a secret, Mami-san. You can trust me."

Of course. Sayaka may be quite ill-tempered and quick to violence and one of the more extremely emotional people you know - but she is also one of the few Magical Girls you'd want watching your back. A secret shared with Sayaka was as good as kept forever; she would bring it to the grave with her, kicking and screaming. Anyone who would try to get it out of her would have to kill her first.

The elevator stops and the doors slide open, revealing the ground floor and the remainder of the early morning. The fresh air is bracingly chill - biting even through your thick sweater and making your breath mist slightly in front of you. Sayaka, however, seems to be completely comfortable, even in just her school uniform - in fact, the only warming garment she's wearing is a red scarf, the knitting somewhat frayed but obviously made with a lot of love.

You smile while mentally cursing Eversor physiology. Darn close-combat killing machines.

The trip to the actual building that Kyuubey had told you about concludes shortly enough - in fact, you were only stopped twice by two senior citizens, both of which are your apartment neighbors. Commenting about how you look like you're glowing lately, and blatantly asking if you're pregnant. You sense Sayaka stiffening up beside you the both times it came up, and both times you waited for a moment before cheerfully denying it.

It's after that, plus a few moments of making sure that the coast is clear, that the both of you finally find the gap in reality that would lead inside the Witch's Barrier. Your Soul Gem, in ring form, is growing warm around your finger - and as you hold it nearer to the gap itself, which is basically the post where the bicycle stand is propped up - the jewel inset sparks, confirming your suspicions.

"Well, there it is, Mami-san." Sayaka breathes, rolling her shoulders and cracking her knuckles. "What's the game plan? Do we go in together, or one of us stays here in case of backup?"

You look at Sayaka, and then back at the gap.
What did you decide to do, here?

Together. The whispering, plus the way Kyubey was acting was odd. Taking Sayaka with us wasn't a spur of the moment thing, he planned that before he used her a courier. If something is up we want her to act as a vanguard, since she's the eversor. Definitely not so that she has her back to our guns if anything fishy happens.

Plus it gives her a chance to prove herself, with Mami there to make sure she doesn't get in over her head.

You decided that both of you should be going into the Barrier. Leaving someone outside just in case backup is needed would've been the more prudent choice, but having two Magical Girls inside at the same time would mean that the gestating Witch would be found much more quickly, and that would also cut down the turnaround time of this little assignment by quite the drastic amount. Besides, Kyuubey did say Sayaka needed to vent some steam, and this would give you the chance to bolster her self-confidence some - and any opportunity to do so would be worth it.

You tell the blue-haired Eversor your decision, and she nods, smiling, obviously pleased. "Yeah, that's...I was just about to suggest that, Mami-san. It'd be faster for us to finish this up if the both of us are looking, right?" A spark of blue light, and her Soul Gem manifests in front of her, in all its cerulean glory - and she snatches it out of the air with a snap. "We'll be done in no time flat!"

You return her smile, just as your own Soul Gem blossoms into existence on top of your palm as well. It's then that you ask her - just as you take her hand - what should be standard operating procedure for Witch Barrier Entry. One of Mami-san's infamous pop quizzes, you've heard the newbies murmur in the locker room.

"You hold hands with your Barrier Buddy, of course." Sayaka blinks, as if offended that you'd even ask her something so simple. "That way, we end up together at the same spot, if the portal tries to drop us somewhere random...a-and transformation only upon entering, right?"

"I...I guess you can say that." Sayaka murmurs, bashful, unconsciously giving your hand a squeeze. "A-anyway, let's...let's just go already, okay, Mami-san?"

You nod in the affirmative, and lead Sayaka into the Barrier. Anyone looking at you would have seen a rather fetching girl with blonde curls lead her blue-haired companion right into a post - and disappear.

Immediately, the sound of the world is snuffed out. No slow decrease of volume or a gradual muffling into silence - as soon as you step through, all noise is silenced.

You have stepped out of one reality and into another.

For a moment, everything around you is smothered in inky darkness. A moment more, and it's then that a suffused light suddenly illuminates everything else - displaying what looks very much like some sort of twisted landscape made completely out of the things you'd expect in a downtown sweets shop. Towers of peppermint, jutting out from the ground, topped by chocolate discs. The sky a dark crimson, with clouds of heavy syrup dripping into the horizon. The ground - stable, but soft and moist, letting you sink a few inches into it. You realize with a faint sense of horror that you're standing in cake. The ground is cake.

The worst is the smell. A cloying smell of sweetness. Every breath sugary, thick and heavy in your lungs. Making your eyes sting and your stomach turn.

Behind you, Sayaka loudly deposits the breakfast you made her into the ground.

In hindsight, you probably shouldn't have put so much syrup on her pancakes.

I could be very well wrong. Either way, Mami is the only character who's interacted with Witch's (or familiars/servants) so far.

You give Sayaka enough time to get herself back together and tell you she's ready - before it's then that you let go of her hand, clammy as it was. You turn to look at her just as she starts to heave again - and it's then that you offer her your personal handkerchief, monogrammed especially for you. The blue-haired Eversor blinks at this, before gratefully taking it - she'd almost wiped her mouth on her sleeve.

"T-thank you, Mami-san." Sayaka murmurs as she delicately wipes her mouth on expensive monogrammed silk. "O-oh, wait...t-this is yours, a-and I was just...sick, and--"

You shake your head at her. You don't mind. She can just throw it away after she's done with it. Much better to ruin a handkerchief than her uniform.

"N-no, I...I'm going to wash this, Mami-san. I will." Sayaka says firmly, folding it carefully and then placing it into her skirt pocket. "A-anyway. This...this is sort of freaky." She gives the barrier a look around. "Not the sort I'm used to, at all. Usually it's an urban background with some very nasty surprises, but cake...? And...and are those gingerbread men, walking around? ARE THOSE SERIOUSLY GINGERBREAD MEN--"

You hush Sayaka. You tell her that despite how strange your surroundings are, it still has the laws of normal physics to work with. Or at least a rough approximation of it, and that she shouldn't let the weirdness get to her. You still have to find the Witch, after all.

"A-alright. Yeah, that makes sense." Sayaka breathes. "Anyway, uh...guess we should transform, right, Mami-san?"

You nod. You grip your Soul Gem tightly in your hand, before kissing the brass gilding gently. The bright amber gem glowing even more fiercely. Sayaka does the same, pressing her Soul Gem against her forehead.

Two brief blasts of light, and the both of you step forward, in your Magical Girl costumes. The hunter's garb fitting nicely over your form, and you raise a gloved hand to gently adjust the beret sitting on top of your head. Beside you, Sayaka straightens her skirt, grumbling about how seemingly shorter it's getting with every transformation.

You tug at the hem of your gloves, before snapping a hand downward - one of your signature rifles falling out and stabbing heavily into the moist, layered ground beside you. You give the readied weapon a glance - and it's then that you sigh in relief that you see that it's one of your silver rifles. Your normal rifles. You grip it by the handle and pull it out, sighting briefly along the barrel.

You're not too sure why you're relieved. What were you expecting?

"This is the part where we split up, don't we, Mami-san?" Sayaka asks, and you hear the clink of cold steel as Sayaka readies herself as well. "Or...do you want us to stick together, just in case?"

You decided that you and Sayaka should stick together then. Splitting up in this kind of barrier would be dangerous, considering that the area itself is unfamiliar and the terrain unstable. You're not even putting it past this barrier to have some sort of thematic traps - like the cake floor giving way to a hot molten chocolate bath, or something. You sticking together wouldn't exactly make things go faster, but at the very least you'll be prepared for whatever happens.

You tell Sayaka to go ahead and scout ahead of you. Five meter distance, as little sound as possible. You'll cover her, same as always. She nods at this, grinning as she draws another sword from the depths of her cake.

"Alright, Mami-san. Hopefully we don't run into some sort of candy monster, or something." She whispers, smiling "Maybe we should've brought Kyoko-chan with us, you know? Just let her loose here and she'd eat us a path right into the Witch, guaranteed. She's got the biggest sweet tooth I've ever seen."

You barely supress a giggle, before you shush her again and usher her back into being serious about all this. She does so immediately, and the both of you begin stalking through the barrier, running from cover to cover, as quiet as possible, sneaking whenever the situation decreed it. The key here was to avoid being detected by familiars, which meant steering clear of any sentient moving object milling about the barrier. Being seen or accidentally killing one could potentially bring the Witch on your asses, and you're trying to get the jump on it before it does that.

Part of me wants to abandon Matsuda to her death just to cause a time paradox, but I'm guessing even if we ignore her Matsuda would survive anyway. Plus, it's not in Mami's character to just leave someone to die.

let's not go where someone has already failed and attracted the Witch's attentions.

If these is already a magical girl in here, AND she's been defeated to the point of dying, we need to be extra careful with this witch. Clearly, she's already to a point where she can defend herself. If Sayaka is as new to this as she appears, we might want to take the witch on by our self.

We can't risk two girls getting hurt, after all.

I say we find the wounded, have Sayaka take her out of the barrier to get healed, and finish the witch ourselves.

Time is much more slippery then that. If we find her, she gets rescued and thats how she joins but is mad at us for leaving the hunt behind to help her.

If we don't, we'll find her later, and the damage done and the time spent away from critical care will be what caused her mind to snap and be a bitch.

Since you accepted Kyuubey's contract, you've made certain promises to yourself. Each one meaningful, each one markedly more difficult than the last, and each one you plan to carry out whatever it takes. One of them, of course, was to never let a Magical Girl die on your watch while there was something that could be done about it.

This is why you yourself had devoted a significant chunk of your career learning the taxing art of healing - how to heal fatal wounds by brute-forcing it with your Soul Gem. Of course, you've never really had an opportunity to use it - you've even been warned not to, as it drains Soul Gem purity like nothing else - but the fact that you can do it at the very least helps you sleep just a bit easier, knowing that you can pull it off if it's needed. You can save a life when it needs saving.

You decided to save the Magical Girl. You don't even waste time thinking about the contrary. That's the way it's going to be. If your doing so rouses the Witch and you have to kill it by yourself - while Sayaka gets the injured Magical Girl out of this Barrier - then so be it.

Sayaka nods, swallowing audibly. Her eyes still wide and staring, but she seems to be pulling it together now that you both have a definite course of action. She closes her eyes and breathes in deeply - and you see an expressionless mask slide over her face as she opens her eyes. Eyes dilating, breathing normalizing. Eversor training coming into play.

"Alright, Mami-san." Sayaka murmurs. "Rescue the girl, kill the Witch. Simple enough." Another breath. "I have her scent. I know where she is."

You give her a nod, and it's then that the blue-haired Eversor breaks into a run, deeper into the Barrier. Her cape unfurling behind her. Heading right towards what seems to be a long bridgeway, with a set of double doors at the very end. An unlit OPERATION IN PROGRESS sign at the very top of the doors.

You follow suit, running faster than you've ever ran before.

There really is no time to waste. No time at all.

Sayaka bursts through the doors - you thought she was going to cut them open, but they yield easily enough - and you follow suit only a few heartbeats later.

You nearly slam into Sayaka's caped form as you do so. The Eversor standing stock still, not even breathing deeply. Keeping up with her, however, had taken the breath out of you just a bit.

"Mami-san?" Sayaka murmurs, awe and fear in her voice. "I...I think I found the girl. But then, I think...I think the Witch wasn't dormant at all."

She points upward. The doors had led to some sort of towering, circular room, the ceiling nearly invisible because of high up it is. The walls are curved with no corners, with platforms standing on thin stalks, like some sort of minimalist mushroom, reach up to impossible heights. Donuts the size of truck tires litter the background. Candies the size of a human skull rolling despondently on a hard chocolate floor.

In the very center of the room, a girl wearing a Magical Costume that's made up of whites and purples, with black stockings. Her hair, black and impossibly long, obscures her face. She's lying on her back - and there's a ragged hole in the center of her chest. The blood caked and dried.

Above her - things. Large, gigantic, flying things, pure black with bright orange spots, reminding you of colossal slugs. Twisting and spinning languidly in midair. Each the size of a...an entire bus. Or a whale. Their faces cartoon-like, clownish, with wide toothy smiles that reminded you quite sharply of sharks.

"...Mami-san?" For what seems to be the hundredth time today, Sayaka asks you what to do. And this time, her voice is trembling as she does so.

The only problem is, you don't quite know how to answer her.

That's probably the most likely explanation. The whole Faust and Homura business started up well before this quest, and Faust started to exert her influence into the world as Homura was half-dead with her heart ripped out. Or Faust existed well before this and the golden weapons into the world to increase her power, and is only now strong enough to manifest as Pinky.

I`ve been actually thinking something along those lines.

I mean, going by the hints Pinky and our Phone dropped, I think that our world and every person and magical girl in it is actually part of a huge Witch-Barrier.

We`re not real. Everyone else isn`t real. The sky, the moon, not a single soul on earth, not even Q_B, not even earth itself. They act like they are supposed to act because they were created to resemble the real world as much as possible.

We are stuck in a BAD END of Puella Magica Madoka where Homura didn`t manage to finish off Madoka before she became a Godmode-Witch.

It was lampshaded even in this Thread.

Witches try to cling to things from their past lives.

An interesting theory. Perhaps Chiaki is significant in this way because she's the only "real" thing in the witch-simulation. Or at least a copy created from something that was not native to Faust's world. But if that's true, why even bother with the golden weapons and such when you've got control of everything that happens in the universe? Unless Faust/Pinky is a lonely god looking to amuse herself for all eternity, doing all of this would be futile in the end; perhaps her creation has a life of its own and can surpass her, or become a stable reality in its own right.

Alternatively, Faust's world could be real. After achieving godlike power, she modified an existing universe by adding/borrowing elements belonging to other universes that she took a liking to. But creating such a thing drained her power greatly (along getting messed up by Homura), and thus she created the weapons to recover her power and influence. In this way, she would not be dissimilar to Ebon Night in MetaQuest, as he created Horrorworld as a place to amuse himself and recover from getting smacked down from dozens of pissed off deities.

Or possibly Pinky is an extension of Faust that wants to die.
She set out the golden weapons and Chiaki because she couldn't just an hero so she made something that had the potential to end her.

And maybe this isn't the first time she has attempted it given she is now spreading the golden weapons around prior to murderface being a part of everything (which was quite heavily implied with Kilgore as well)

I suppose it's not impossible to believe that Homura had nothing to do with the start of Faust and the Golden Weapons. She just showed up and tried to stop her later, after Faust got started.

Maybe Homura is from a different timeline entirely and came... sideways to try to stop Faust here from some reason. That would then ask where this timeline's Homura is.

Following that line of logic, potentially Homura is actually an agent of God-Madoka, sent to this timeline to defeat a rival evil-Madoka before she acended to godhood?

Time travel doesn't work like this in PMMM.
When Homura reset the timeline she herself travel back in time which initiate the new timeline.

It's not like BTTF where you use a time machine that physically transport you in another timeline (allowing for multiple copies to exist at the same time).

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

Two years ago, you were a Magical Girl, and you were the very picture of one. Beautiful, generously-endowed, and generally peerless in three key areas: combat, markmanship, and housewifery. You can easily fight four grown men at once, put a round in a flea's ass 400 yards away, and perform a tea ceremony worthy of royalty - all in the same day. And you have done exactly that, in the same order, during the course of your storied career.

During the course of said career, however, you've gotten yourself into certain situations that may in fact rely on a fourth key area: a singular force of will that your superiors had told you time and again was your best asset, tempered with the kindest soul imaginable. A cold, sharp mind of what needed to be done, sheathed with an almost heroic moral code that you stubbornly held fast to. An iron fist in a velvet glove.

This is one of those situations.

You are Tomoe Mami. Two years ago, you accepted an assignment from your Incubator, Kyuubey, to purge a gestating Witch a few blocks away from your own apartment. With Miki Sayaka, fellow Magical Girl and Eversor, you made your way to the chasm between realities, where the real world as you knew it ended and the Witch's barrier began. Barely having transformed did the both of you detect another Magical Girl inside the barier with you - and they're as close to death as anyone can ever be. With Sayaka's help, you find her in the worst position imaginable.

Supine on the ground, unconscious, and with what looks to be wurm-like monsters flying overhead. Each one the size of whales. Each one grinning madly with mouths bristling with teeth. Their eyes, mad and wide and staring, darting eratically in different directions, as if looking for something to murder.

What did you do in this situation?

[]You distracted the monsters.
[]You had Sayaka be the distraction.
[]You had some other plan up your sleeve.

>[x]You thought of some other plan

I'd try to think of some clever plan here, but I'm not too familiar with either of these MG's powers. And we don't have a lot of resources at our disposal, either.

Although, if we can move about the room without getting seen, Sayaka and might be able to rig up some sort of distraction using clever use of muskets and ribbons. Unlimited swords on the part of Sayaka could create a very dangerous sniper's nest. When the musket nest is triggered, those creatures will immediately go to investigate the noise, probably with murderous intent. Hopefully they'll be slowed enough by the ridiculous amount of swords so that Mami and Sayaka can go and free this magical girl.

Even without meta knowledge it's easy to see that sending Sayaka in against those flying close combat beasts would be too dangerous.

Lets make it our priority to get the other girl and then get out. To do that we should distract the candy whales from a distance whilst Sayaka gets the other magical girl.

Yes. Yes, of course. You didn't have time to process a whole lot of theoreticals, or go over a well-planned practical with Sayaka. You were acting on pure instinct. You saw someone that needed saving. Someone that needed protecting. And you, Mami Tomoe, would not let that Magical Girl remain here for a moment longer. If she is well and truly dead, then at the very least, you can give her a decent burial. If she was still alive, then you can finally sleep a bit easier at night, knowing that some good comes out of being a Magical Girl.

Not much, but some.

"Get her out of here, Sayaka-chan." You whisper to Sayaka just as you tear your beret off and fling it into the air above you - just as you throw both hands downward in a quick, practiced gesture. The combined movement causing approximately twenty ivory-clad rifles to snap into reality around you, each one stabbed perfectly into the ground, a forest of slender white stalks. "The moment I start firing, I want you to run as fast as you can, grab her, and get her out of here. Make for the barrier's exit. I will hold them as long as I can, and then follow you out." You catch your beret, and slash it across the air in front of you once, twice, three times - dispensing even more of your weapons in front of you, neat little rows of weaponry, just begging to be used. Just waiting to kill.

You let out a breath as you confirm that none of them turned out to be gold.

There's no reason that they'd be gold, though. You...you've never had one turn out like that. Why are you worried?

No. No. Focus. You have a life to save here.

"O-okay. I'll..." Sayaka seems to blink slowly at you as your plan sinks in. "Wait. What? You're going to distract them?" Her eyes go wide. "M-Mami-san, I know you want to save that girl and all, but I think maybe we should--"

You reach down to pull out a rifle, one in each hand, and murmur a brief prayer as you hold them up. Each rifle solid in its weight, each flint glowing crimson red in warm anticipation. The simplest and most elegant firearm you've ever had the pleasure to fire - and God knows you've tried everything else. Point, aim, shoot. No need to reload - just throw it away or use it as a club if there's need to.

You turn to Sayaka and give her a smile, before saying four words that you know worked every single time. Four words you took care not to abuse, so as not to dull their effect. Four words that you knew would settle this argument here and now, and have Sayaka doing what you've just ordered her to do.

"I'm counting on you."

[2/3]

>>20161638

Sayaka nods, swallowing audibly. "O-okay. Alright, Mami-san. I'm...I'll do it. I'll meet you outside the Barrier." She smiles as well, awkwardly at first, but then more confidently as your encouragement takes effect.

So simple, Sayaka-chan was. So predictable. That was why you liked her so much.

With another snap, you hold out both rifles, fingers curling around the triggers.

How did you distract the monsters?

[]You engaged each target one by one, making sure to pump enough shots to kill before moving on to the next.
[]You gave Sayaka covering fire by shooting at as many targets as you can in the shortest span of time.
[]You shoot but making sure not to hit the monsters. You wanted them to be distracted, not necessarily aggressive.

Mami trying to save Kirika was her attempt at saving herself by extension. Chiaki refusing to back off and mercilessly killing Kirika was a reflection of what Chiaki might do to her too.

Food for thought.

You bring both rifles closer together as you draw a beat on one of the monsters - this particular one looking bigger and meaner and nastier than the rest. The forest of teeth in its drooling mouth stained pink, as if it just had a particularly ambulatory meal. A meal that probably didn't have time to even scream.

It will be the first to die, you decide.

You feel Sayaka tense up beside you, crouching low on the ground. She'd abandoned both of her swords behind her - she'll need her hands free to grab the girl, of course - and you hear her whisper a prayer of her own, one you recognize as the Litany of Fear. A smile briefly crosses your lips at the irony of the situation.

Anyone else would have been scared out of their wits, Magical Girl or no. Being outnumbered in a Witch Barrier is not a situation anyone deserves to be in, no matter what the reason.

Unless the reason itself was to save a life. In which case, you do not have a right to be scared. You have no right, no time, no room to be. For you are, after all, to be their salvation. Their angel.

You stopped being afraid the moment you decided to save her.

Your fingers tighten around the triggers, and it's with a small indrawn breath that you pull them all the way. The hammers clicking as they slam forward in perfect time. Triggering the firing mechanism with a spray of red-hot flinders. Both rifles kicking in your hands, the brutal recoil making your entire frame quiver, the blinding flash of the muzzle flare erupting a split second before the thunder-crack of the twin detonations. The noise loud enough to echo throughout the entire chamber.

You've already disposed of the rifles and had already picked up two fresh ones even before the rounds themselves make impact. The two bolts of golden light spearing right through a grinning face, right between the eyes, having turned towards you as soon as the guns themselves had barked their brutal roar. You've already picked a new target even before the light in those crazed, multi-hued eyes dim as it wobbles in the air before crashing into the ground in a crumpling nose dive.

Sayaka utters the worst expletive you've ever heard from her so far before she all but disappears from your side. You only catch a brief glimpse of her cape unfurling behind her as she runs, impossibly fast, almost fast enough to be unseen.

And it's then that everything goes to hell, as ten other faces turn towards you. Smiling. Grinning.
Hungry.

How did you proceed?

It's a bit disconcerting to note, right then, that they didn't so much as recognize that one of their kind had just been summarily dealt with - but they even seemed to take delight in it, as you see three of the grinning beasts break off from the pack now slowly floating towards you.

They slither through the air, bodies quivering in an almost liquid fashion as they eagerly converge onto the corpse of their slain kin - and it's then that you see them start to feast. Cannibalizing their relative. Teeth ripping into skin, muscle, bone. The wet crunching making your very skin crawl as you watch this bestial, taboo feasting, nearly distracting you from the fact that you have the rapt attention of a number of these creatures, a horde of them drifting ever closer, each one looking at you with hunger in their eyes.

It's only when they seem to have gotten enough of an eyeful of you that they start to charge. No longer meandering through the thick, cloying air - you actually see them rear up and then dive towards you, eyes gleaming, mouths opening. Each one poised to either swallow you hole or bite a neat chunk out of your body.

Either way, you did not envision yourself dying in such a fashion. Such an exagerrated, almost cartoonish death. Eaten alive by a Witch in its own barrier?

Certainly not.

Also, I too worry about Mami's Golden Gun. Does she still have it in the main timeline? Has she been suppressing it's effects the whole time? Or has she somehow rid herself of it, and if so, how, because we might want to know how to do that.

And what's QB's angle, here, if he knew that at least at one point she had one; Did maybe he not want to risk Mami to experiment, so he pawned the responsibility off to us (ie; Kirika and Murderface being much more expendable then Mami, his most loyal follower)?

You start shooting. And shooting. And shooting some more. Discarding rifles with every shot, alternating between hands. Each discharge thunderous and meaningful. Each stab of recoil forced into stability with clenched teeth and braced limbs. Your curls - and other certain elements on your body - shaking briefly with every ground-shaking tremor of every rifle blast.

You've already killed three of them before the fourth one smashes right into the ground you've been standing on a moment ago. Scattering inert rifles everywhere.

It's just too unfortunate that you've already jumped up onto its sinewy back, running down its length. A halo of rifles hovering around you as you continue the uninterrupted stream of unrelenting gunfire, ready to be snatched up at a moment's notice.

You don't notice it yourself, but you're smiling as you do this.

With another jump, you hop off the monster's back - grabbing a rifle in each hand as you become airborne - and you roll to the side as you land, just another of the monsters swoop in to try and catch you in its mouth. You give it both barrels, blasting its face open with a booming report.

The things smell bad when they die, you think, before tossing the spent rifles over your shoulders and grabbing two fresh ones.

Five targets are dead. Six remain in the air - and you notice that two of them seem to have changed. Subtly. You realize that those are the same two that had been feasting on the one you first killed.

What did you do then?
[]You checked on Sayaka to see how she's doing.
[]You continued to attack. Purge them all first.

I kinda assumed that all of this is Madoka's little universe/witch barrier when she succumbed to that world-spanning witch[Gretchin I think], and what Chiaki is living through is just a big fat lie.

Kriemhild Gretchen is Madoka's witch. Most timelines, she's powerful enough to kill all humanity in ten or so days. In the final timeline, when Madoka becomes a 'goddess', Kriemhild Gretchen becomes so large that Earth is the size of one of her eyes. She was probably an universal threat then, but Madoka won out.

My pet theory is that the entire planned community of Mitakihara Town is actually a plot by QB to raise and harvest magical girls, by using his wishes on various members of the community to build his perfect society; one that has just enough boredom and quiet despair that people want out or want to change the world.

This being a planned community, it would have taken a lot of drive and effort by a lot of people to get it to where it is. That 'owning' your city, building it to the dream town YOU want it to be, is prime to the mindset to the people that live there. That people like Madoka's mother drive everything they have into their careers, potentially pushing family and friends to the side. Her moms snap wish was to get rid of her partner so she could take over the company; perfect ground for QB.

Hell, the first witches in the area were probubly the founders of the city, who wished for a utopia dream where their daughters could build the life they wanted with their own two hands.

Meanwhile, QB smiled and girls died.

Yes. You continued. You decided that Sayaka didn't need to be checked on. She was your junior, yes, but she was also an Eversor. If she couldn't handle a simple extraction then you wouldn't have allowed her to tag along.

The smile on your face goes wider as you slip into your rhythm, getting into your zone - and it's here that you momentarily stop being the kind, the warm, the sincere Tomoe Mami that all the juniors look up to and all the seniors look toward to for advice. The outward persona that others know you and love you by melts away, revealing yourself at your very core.

A very efficient Magical Girl who sincerely enjoys what she does and is frighteningly good at it.

Your movements stop becoming crisp and calculated - rather, they become quicker, easier, more fluid, more instinctive. Your body feels lighter than ever before as you discharge, dispose, and dispense rifles in the same movement. You barely even feel the recoil now, how they used to nearly jolt your shoulder out of joint if you shot a rifle without the proper bracing all but a distant memory.

No longer is this some simple dealing of death in long range, this is a dance to you now. One that sees another of the beasts dead, its snake-like body torn asunder by a dozen golden rounds being rifled into it from a dozen different directions all at once.

It crashes into the ground just as you reach up with one hand to adjust your beret as you run - before flicking that hand outwards, your fingers closing upon the manifested rifle's handle just as it materialized. At the same time, you track the beasts remaining aloft above you - trying to pinpoint the ones that had been consuming the flesh of their own. Both your hands gripping your rifle.

There. You see both of them, already heading towards one of the corpses you had reduced one of their comrades into. The others, meanwhile, are still trying their level best to pursue you.

You roll to the side just in time as one of them lunge at you again, smashing its grinning face into the cake-wall of the chamber. You come to a stop on one knee, your rifle at your cheek as you aim down its barrel in a classic firing position - and it's then that you realize something that makes your blood run cold.

You...you just drew a golden weapon. It's one of your rifles, the gilding is the same, the rifling is the same, even its weight...and yet it is pure gold, brilliant, almost luminous.

What did you do with it?

It's implied that she had a black eyes episode, probably with blood lust, after drawing a golden rifle. ITtwas heavily implied that she told Kyubey about the episode and the black eyes, as she had him check her soul gem readings. It's not mentioned whether she mentioned the golden rifle or not.

The implied episode and altered soul gem readings are enough for her inner dialogue to dread drawing a golden rifle and feel relieved at drawing a silver one.

That's enough, I think.

That's meta knowledge. For all you know it might be how Mami ends up AFTER the flashback.

If Mami went FLESH OF FALLEN ANGELS after using a golden rifle, I'm okay with dropping it, but if it wasn't caused by a rifle (remember, Chiaki switched without the golden gun a few times), I don't think dropping a weapon when her life could depend on it is a sane choice.

That's right, you did. You took it by the rifle and tossed it as far as you could, away from you, horrified that you even contemplated using it. Even if you knew, somehow, that one shot from the golden weapon would end anything in its path - you know that nothing good would ever come from using it.

You raise your arm to dispense another rifle, any rifle, praying fervently and desperately to any god who will listen to you to make it a normal one - when it's then that a blast of hot, humid, putrid air nearly flattens you against the wall behind you. You look up--

--and see one of the beasts right on top of you, its gigantic maw open. Its teeth jagged, blackly-charged with death, gilding a cavernous mouth curiously resembling that of a human being's - if that human being had jagged ivory tusks for teeth, of course, and had a mouth large enough to swallow a bus. Foul strings of saliva and muck and witchstuff dripping from its palate.

With no time to move, to dodge, or even to scream - there is one thought that crosses your mind as you stare into the abyss. Into your doom.

This is not how you planned to die.

As you feel rather than see the monster's jaws start to close over your head, the motion curiously slow, almost meandering - the last words that leave your lips is a phrase. A short one, made up of five words. Nonsensical to everyone who might hear it, although they would probably remark how foreboding it is.

A crimson tinge coloring your vision as you feel the rough shape of a rifle handle press against your hand. Luxioriously warm, reassuringly solid. A golden shine filling your vision briefly.

This is not how you planned on dying. Not at all. But if it's your time, it's your time.

All you want now is to die fighting.

"MAMI!"

The scream jolts you out of your reverie, the bloody mist in your vision clearing up as if it never was in the first place. The hand that roughly grabs a handful of your corset - tugging you back roughly and all but slamming you hard against the wall behind you - knocks the wind of you, and for the briefest moment the edges of your vision blur white.

Making it hard to focus on Sayaka as she interposes herself between you and the monster, the sword in her hands already traveling in a deadly upward arc.

The beast seems to freeze in place, before the upper half of its face slides momentarily to the side, before falling away in a ground-shaking impact. The rest of its body falls in the other direction a heartbeat later, black putrid blood geysering out of each half in turbulent bursts.

I suppose that's one advantage of the QB company. In the anime the magical girls couldn't stop hunting the witches their soul gem would eventually blacken.
However here, QB can move girls into performing important support role (remember when we were about the entire the silent room, it was commented that not all girls are out in the field) and get the ones that are hunting witches to keep supplying grief seeds.

I suppose that advantage is good enough to offset a potential explosion in witch population

You cough as you try to breathe in, wincing at the pain flaring at your sides as you do. As thankful as you are of Sayaka saving you, she had probably broken a few of your ribs. Nothing major, of course, but it makes it hurt to breathe.

Still. You're alive. Still alive. After you were sure that you've seen your last moments here. After you almost--

You see the golden rifle, at the far corner of the chamber, glinting at your direction. Numbly, you reach toward it - when you feel Sayaka's hand grip your outstretched own by the wrist, pulling you up back on your feet.

"Mami-san, we're going. I called in another unit to help us, but we have to go." Sayaka's voice is urgent, laced with fear. "There's a lot more of these things outside! We have to go!"

You nod, tearing your gaze from the golden rifle - and it's then that you blink and ask her about the girl.

"She's already outside the barrier! I tried to heal most of her wounds, but I didn't have time to resuscitate her!" It's then that she starts to drag you towards the exit. "MAMI-SAN, come ON! RUN!"

[]Close the chamber doors behind you and leave a trap just in case they decide to follow.

You let Sayaka lead the way, the Eversor's grip painfully tight around your wrist, enough that you're sure that her fingers will definitely leave marks later - but you give no voice to your pain as you try to keep up. You hear them feasting more on their dead, and you turn against the impulse of looking. You fear that you'd lose more than your own breakfast if you do.

Its' a bit funny how things turned out. Earlier you were in your element, blasting away with your rifles. Now you're letting yourself get led out of a Barrier like a horror-struck novice - and by your own junior, no less.

You manage to barely get out of there as the remaining beasts are swept up in their feeding frenzy, and as you run past the wooden doors leading to the chamber, it's then that you stop, pulling Sayaka to a halt as you do so. She turns towards you, clearly incensed and ready to reiterate how it's important that you leave - when you hold up a hand as you tug your ribbon free from your collar.

Your hand is shaking as you does so, but that is enough to silence her. For now.

She nods and steps back as you kick both doors close, shoving a few rifles through the handles to wedge them shut. It's here, then, that you twirl the ribbon around your arm - golden light twisting into the material as you continue to manipulate its form - and it's then that it takes shape into the grand, cannon-sized barrel of the firearm you make a point to finish off each Witch you encounter with. A graceful tripod manifesting underneath it just as you prop it up in front of the doors, facing the room itself.

Another length of ribbon pulled, this time from your sleeve, and you tie a makeshift tripwire with the cannon itself as the stinger. Should anyone - or anything - force the doorway to open hard enough, they would then trigger the biggest weapon in your arsenal. Making it fire into their stupid faces.

Giving you and Sayaka enough time to get back to the outside world. And safety.

You nod to the Eversor and she grabs your hand again. This time, you hold onto hers, as tightly as you can.

The exit is almost in sight when you hear the roar of discharge, and feel the impact of the blastwave making the very ground under your feet tremble.

But that never meant you forgetting your own conventions. That would be just unprofessional.

"H-here it is! The exit! Mami-san, this is the exit--" Sayaka exclaims, almost tearful in relief as she points towards a glowing scar in the air only a few meters away from you - and you can definitely see the outside world peeking in from it. You gasp in agreement.

Out of this Nightmare. Away from the Golden Weapon.

It's over. It should be. It's done.

You saved another life, while being saved yourself.

You...you should probably think about retirement.

Light floods everything as Sayaka all but drags you through the wound in reality.

And at that very moment - as you stumble back into the real world, feeling asphalt under your feet instead of layered cake, breathing air instead of sugary vapors - you feel a wave of nausea coming over you. One so powerful that it takes all your willpower not to retch. Sayaka is not as fortunate, and more of the breakfast you made for her ends up where it probably shouldn't be.

"Ugh. Wash it out, Miki," You hear a cool, silken-smooth voice say, and you look up to see a tall young woman, slender in form and in costume, hand Sayaka a water bottle. Her Magical Girl outfit as black as her short hair, offset by the presence of flared sleeves ending in white ruffles. A black leather eyepatch covering one of her eyes in a rakish angle - the other one, a bright purple, widens in concern as it focuses on you. But only for a moment.

You try to smile at her, but you feel the ground start to tilt - and you almost fall, before you're caught by the one person you had long since considered your equal. Her cold, gloved hands a comfort as they grip you and hold you up.

"K-Kirika...I..." You try to talk, but the nausea overcomes you again. You grit your teeth, swallowing bile. You will not throw up on your best friend. "What's going on...? I feel...sick..."

The girl you're holding onto for dear life sighs, before leading you to one of the benches nearby. "It'll pass. Deep breaths, Mami, slow and steady." You let Kirika maneuver you onto the bench itself - you feel much too weak to do anything right now. "Exposure to 'em always does that. A few more days and you'll get used to it."

20164619

You furrow your brow as you glance up at her. Exposure to who? Get used to what?

Kirika blinks, before smiling as she brushes sweat-matted hair away from your eyes.

"The Culexus, of course. Kyuubey sent three of them as backup, along with yours truly. We'll mop up the Witch, while you can accompany your little rescue party back to Headquarters on medevac. Your unnamed Magical Girl along with you."

You blink in confusion, before looking past Kirika to see the trio of girls standing next to the Barrier gateway. Each one of them clad in form-fitting black, their uniforms padded at main joints and spiked in some certain key impact areas. Their faces covered by what looks to be custom-built biker helmets, designed to hug and encase the skull rather than become a shell of armor. The front stylized into a grinning skull.

"Those...those are Culexus?" You manage to whisper, feeling every word sour upon your speaking them. It's the first time you've seen them - they've always been a sort of Officio legend. Officially, they exist, but they've always been concealed. Maybe it was because their entire point - and what made them so infamous - was that their strengths, one way or another, was based on physically disabling a Magical Girl by simply being in the same room as her. Sometimes even just the same street, or even the same country. Walking Anti-Magic batteries.

One of them crouches slightly to help Sayaka up, only to have the blue-haired Eversor slap the offered hand away.

You shake your head, and look up at Kirika. What did you do at this moment?

[]You asked about the Magical Girl, and how she was.

Another thought on Mami's "retirement" to being kyuubeys secretary,
She was reassigned to watch murderface much like murderface was given Midori to watch.

The nausea seems to be ebbing slightly, but it is replaced with a rather alarming sense of fatigue - and you lean into Kirika's frame, one gloved hand grasping her sleeve feebly. You desperately want to sleep, to rest, to dream this horrible start to the day away - but you force yourself to remain awake. The girl is important. She is important.

"Don't worry about her, Mami. One of the Culexus jump-started her Soul Gem the moment she saw her lying there, right outside the barrier gate. Used up two Grief Seeds, too. Nice girls, those Culexus." Kirika clicks her tongue. "Sayaka could have left her in a less inconspicuous spot, but she was trying her best, so I can't fault her for that."

"S-so...she's safe? The girl is safe?" You ask as you close your eyes. You almost feel like crying in relief. "She'll be alright...?"

"Already on the way to recovery as we speak. We'll lock her in the Silent Room, of course, ask her just how she ended up there. Basic debriefing stuff." Kirika smiles again. "Also, find out what kind of irresponsible Incubator she has. Letting her rot away in a Barrier? Not very nice. Anyway, I figure she's in better shape than you, and..." It's then that your best friend's voice starts to fade. "Mami? Hey, Mami? Don't...fall asleep on me now. Wait, does this mean I'm that boring to talk to? Mami?"

You smile and hold her tighter as you finally let yourself fall into a dark, dreamless, tired sleep.

Also, if anyone wants to go ahead and post the other Chikuwas I drew up, feel free to do so. I'd do it myself but I'm on my phone.

=======================================

Laughter. I hear laughter. It has been a long time since I heard laughter.

I follow the sound to its source. Ah yes, it’s a cherished memory of mine. My wedding day.

Strange. Quite a few details don’t match up. In fact, I don’t remember it being this... well, packed. There’s only three people who know. Hell, there’s my entire family. All dressed up for the occasion. I thought they couldn’t afford to fly everyone here.

And who would be crazy enough to give iron jewellery to a bride? It doesn’t make sense! I must be going crazy. How could I misremember something that important? At least it’s a happy occasion.

My vision fades. I black out.

...And I’m treated to a gorgeous sight. I smell a fresh sea breeze. I’m lying on what feels like... sand? A beach? I’m lying on a beach?

And in front of my eyes is Takane is a bikini. I have to admit, she looks really good in that. Though something seems a bit off.

Oh. Her top’s undone. And she’s looking at me. I silently curse my youth.

I try to catch her attention. It doesn’t work. I stare, partly in horror and partly in glee, as the bikini top slowly falls off her ample chest. I lean forward...

I wake up with a start, to the surprise of the flight attendant at the doorway. I must have fallen off the chair I was on and collided with the table. My left hand throbs with pain.

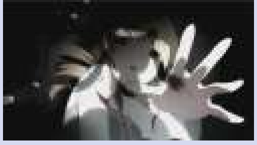
The blonde girl shot up out of bed, kicking blankets off her body, sending a pillow flying. She panted heavily, bringing one hand up to pat the sweat off her brow. Her glorious curls damp, laying heavily against her forehead. She had that dream again... where she first met Matsuda.



Her last major mission, before Kyubei-san had asked to to let the younger girls handle front line duty.

She had been fine with it, at the time. She was able to take a step back, relax, enjoy herself a little.

That was until a week ago, though.

When her world came crashing down.

Kirika and Matsuda's relationship never had been a good one. Somehow, they always got on each others nerves, and Matsuda's... spotty memory didn't help, either. Mami still kicked herself for that one; if only she had been faster, or if she had been the one to heal her, instead of Sayaka, maybe... maybe...

But none of that mattered anymore.

She kept thinking back to that day, thinking back to every move she made, every shot she fired. Sometimes, sitting here in the dark like this, she wished... maybe... she had just let the girl go. Just left her there, focused on the witch, been the professional and done her job.

Maybe... maybe Kirika would still be alive.

Recoiling from the thought, the blonde sobbed, unable to stop the flow of tears. Who was she?! Thinking of trading one of her best friends for another? At least... at least Kirika had Oriko. Kirika had lived her life, knew friendship, love, and passion.

Matsuda had no one.

But...

Matsuda spent her life drinking her worries away, trying to kill her emotions with painkillers, tried to chase away another that got too close. SHE certantly didn't want to live her life; she seemed to try to run from it, to immerse herself in her work, to push away any pain for the bloodlust filled moments in between.

It's not fair! Why did the one who loved life to it's fullest... have to be... to the one who didn't care.

On the roof, she had been filled with such despair. Two golden weapons, pointed at each other, and Mami knew, just knew, that only one ending would be the true one. A weapon would be without it's master by the end of the night.

But, she too had a golden rifle; beautiful ivory, filigree in gold. She too had felt it's siren's call, it's overwhelming strength, it's prefect fit in her hand.

She had never told them. Not even Kirika, when her eyes opened wide in shock and terror the first night the girl had shown the blonde the beautiful golden katana.

Even at the end, with a deadly shootout between the two impossible to avoid, they thought it their destiny, to destroy the only other person with one. Little did either know, that they weren't alone, that a third had been in their midst.

If they destiny as gold weapon users was to fight, to kill each other... Mami had done a marvelous job playing the other two, getting them to off one of their collective number for her.

Sobbing into the darkness, she clawed at her pillowed gripped between her long fingers.

It was her fault. She was suppose to have stopped them. Not lead them into a battle to the death.

Maybe... it should have been me...

What's with the sudden influx of people writing addons to quest threads? SWQ started it, and it's spreading and frankly I find it annoying. I wouldn't really mind if they just did in-universe stories on the other side of the world, but when they try to tie it into the main quest, it feels like the quest loses its purity. Especially if the questrunner endorses it.

Some tripfag made up an OC and has him involved with one of the characters of the quest, taking away some of the control from Deculture. It feels like thievery, really.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and you're waiting for your flight to be called. You're flying to Siberia - Kamchatka, Siberia, to be precise. All because your mutant cat of an employer thinks that he's found a way to retard your inevitable and downward spiral into insanity, and wants you to look into it.

It bears repeating, of course, that this solution of his has a fifty-fifty chance of working. Fifty percent of actually stopping - or delaying - you turning into someone that needed a concerted effort of three Magical Girls to kill, and with you getting your favorite drinking arm hacked off in the process.

A fifty percent chance of preventing you from becoming a monster that you yourself had to shove ten inches of tempered steel into her spine just to get her to stand still long enough for one of your friends to finish the job. With a sniper rifle usually used to shoot down big game. Or horrifically insane magical girls with golden weapons.

It's nine in the evening. You have a double whisky in your hand and a lit cigarette between your lips, the former half drained of its contents and the latter smoked down to its filter, soon to join its many brothers and sisters in the metal ashtray that you yourself had been busy filling. Behind you is the rather muted hustle of people rushing here and there for their flights, a noise muted even further by the pleasant buzz provided by the generous Mr. Kong and his amber restorative.

Of course, that doesn't mean you're dead to the world completely. Other people at the bar with you had been giving you looks, tutting about being much too young to be busy ruining yourself, but they stopped right after you immediately drained your first double and asked for a refill without missing a beat. They've been completely silent after the bartender - obviously sick of you waving him over again and again - left the bottle of Kong in front of you. Which suits you just fine, really.

Upon your arrival a few hours ago, Misaka had begun to drag both you and Midori all over the place, in her usual effervescence of being curious about normal things and what normal people do. You didn't have that much of a hard time with it, but with Midori loaded down with your luggage - she had gamely volunteered to be the pack mule for the trip, and thus had to contend with carrying three suitcases and one of those things with wheels - you had Misaka slow down enough for you to have the luggage itself taken care of by the airport staff.

They were quite eager to do so, more so when you showed them proper Officio identification. With Midori unencumbered, you put your junior in charge of following Misaka's every whim, while you quietly excused yourself. You were thirsty and you needed to make some calls, you told Misaka. Midori seemed about to say something then, but shut her mouth and simply nodded.

"Kyuubey-san did say our flight won't be for a while, so we'll just kill some time exploring, Matsuda-sempai." She said instead, smiling. "I'll take care of Misaka-chan. You go and do what you have to do."

You blinked at her and could only offer a nod in return just before she got dragged away by Misaka, the arms dealer insisting that she get an audience with the enginseers responsible for keeping the 'huge flying coffins' aloft, and how they should hear her theories regarding the outdated engines still in use. You manage to shout at them that you'll just call them when your flight is ready, and Midori flashed you a thumbs-up in response.

You found the bar a few minutes after that, and you've been drinking ever since.

You should probably get to making those calls, eh?

You pluck the spent cigarette from your lips and grind it out on the ashtray you've filled to capacity and then some - the bartender taking it away with a grunt of slight disgust and sliding an empty one at your direction. You would probably have something to say about that, except you're much too busy dialing Mami's number into your smartphone with one index finger. Doing it carefully, slowly, so that you wouldn't dial someone else's number by accident.

You look down at the phone's glowing screen as it initiates the call. You pick it up off the counter as the other end of the line starts to ring. Once, twice, and it's then that Mami picks up, her voice still rather stiff and polite as she greets you, but warmer. Definitely warmer than the icy tones she spoke in when you went in for your debriefing after murdering Kirika.

Her saying your name again without making it sound like an insult makes you feel just a bit better about yourself, a small smile curling your lips. You ask her how she's doing.

"I was just on my way out of the office, actually. I heard from Kyuubey that you're flying to Siberia with Misaka-chan and our new Callidus - and I'm going to see all three of you off." You hear the crinkling of tissue paper in the background. "And since airline food is disgusting, I made sure to make packed dinners for all three of you. No sense in having you and Misaka-chan forcing down that garbage during a long trip, you'll be sick."

While that is a valid point, I maintain that the chances of it occurring are so low as to be a nonfactor. We've gotten her all paranoid about creepy things offering her faustian bargains, after all.

That's...that's really great. More than you could expect, really. You thank her after a few moments of being stunned into silence. That's Mami for you.

"How about you, Chiaki-san? Did you take care of everything?" Mami's tone of voice turns a bit furtive. She isn't saying it out loud, but you know what she means. "You're going to be away for quite a while, you know. You should at least make sure your affairs are taken care of before leaving."

She clears her throat.

"Iori-chan called me, earlier. She's...devastated, to say the least. What did you say to her, Chiaki?"

You knock back half the contents of your glass. It's going to be a bit hard lying to someone like Mami.

This makes me wonder about Iori's background in the quest. It's never really been stated, has it? She works as an idol, yeah, and obviously has a fair amount of money from that. We were not wrong when we didn't say sorry about inducing orgasms in other magical girls while on the phone with her. It was a stupid thing to do, but not something she was justified in being upset about, given she is not, despite her best attempts, in a relationship with us.

You close your eyes for a moment before replying. Lying to Mami is something that you don't think you would be able to ever do - and you don't. Not here, not now. If being honest gets her angry at you, if being honest gets her to hate you just a bit more than she already does - that's fine, but so long as she hates you for the right reasons, not for the wrong ones.

You open your eyes after your explanation, bracing yourself for reaction. There's a moment of silence, before you hear Mami sigh. When she replies, her voice is somewhere along the lines of disappointment and relief - and you wonder if this is one of your drunken hallucinations or if things are actually starting to look up for you.

"That's...that was actually kind of you to do, Chiaki-san." Your flaxen-haired goddess of luck and comfort and victory says, and for some reason, she sounds apologetic. "I've noticed Iori-san's slight...infatuation with you, and I may have unfortunately encouraged it a bit." Another sigh. "I thought it was just a harmless crush, but if she's reacting in this fashion, she may have decided that things should be a bit more involved between the two of you. So you did the right thing, as painful as it may have seemed." It's then that you hear a smile in her voice. "I'm...proud of you, Chiaki-san. You could have just strung her along and spared her feelings, but that would've made things worse in the long run. This is good for her. And you."

You did something right for once. That's a surprise, and an achievement, considering your track record.

If that's the case, then why do you feel so damn horrible about it?

You agree and thank her. You also remind her to be careful driving.

"I always do. Goodbye, Chiaki-san, and make that your last drink, alright?"

You blink at the glass in your hand. You didn't actually tell her you were drinking, did you?

You try to ask her how she knew, but she disconnects the call before you could. You shake your head, smiling ruefully, and twist the cap back on the bottle of whisky before giving it back to the bartender. Mami's orders.

I just think it might not be prudent to reveal this information until everything with Iori is cleared up. It would probably make Sayaka feel better disposed toward Chiaki, but nobody knows about this quite yet; if we start revealing all this information about Soul Gem shenanigans before we give the truthful explanation to someone reliable such as Mami or even Kyoko, then it will reinforce the false perception that Chiaki was fooling around with another girl while Iori was working herself up into a hysterical frenzy over Chiaki's safety. Not intentionally, no. But the fact that everyone DOES know, kind of means that things get out.
The two of them are good fighters, and Kyouko is even a good friend. But they're both a little stupid when it comes to not mentioning things.

With that call ending on a better note than you expected, you feel a bit obligated to be just as nice to one of your other colleagues. Paying it forward, or at least that's what you remember Mami calling it when she explained the concept to you. Doing nice stuff for other people just because someone else did the same to you - not something you'd probably take up as a hobby, but you can certainly do worse by the very few people in the world you call friends.

You open up your Pictures folder and select the only one inside it: the picture of Sakura Kyoko in the butler costume, with her turned slightly away from the camera to conceal her eyepatch while showing off her rakish ponytail. It's a good picture, you think as you look at it a bit more closely. Kyoko turned away from the viewfinder makes her look sternly aloof, like those male idols teenage girls can't stop screaming about - and the costume does complete the illusion of masculinity.

You find yourself laughing slightly as you send the picture to Sayaka. You briefly consider telling her about the thing with the soul gem and the licking through an enclosed SMS message, but you think that might go down better during a call.

Not ten seconds has passed since you sent Kyoko's picture to her girlfriend did your phone vibrate slightly on the countertop. The screen lighting up, notifying you of the blue-haired Eversor trying to establish a call with you.

You pick it up immediately. No sense in making her wait.

I-If you don't, can you tell me where you got the costume? I..." The Eversor swallows audibly. "...I need that costume. Don't hold out on me, Murderface."

Whoa. What the hell kind of relationship does these two have?

You take a sip of your chilled soda before replying, wincing slightly at the change of temperature of your choice of drink. You tell Sayaka something that you should have told her a long time ago - to stop calling you by that stupid nickname, and to address you properly. Chiaki Matsuda's not that hard to pronounce, is it? Of course it doesn't roll off the tongue as nicely as Murderface does, but at the very least, she won't have to worry about bystanders looking at her strangely when she gets a call from you in public.

"...Alright. Alright, fine. Whatever. Chiaki Matsuda. There, you happy now? Great. Butler costume. Where did you get it and who do I have to kill to get it made for Kyoko again? They had to cut the one she was wearing, and--"

You shake your head at your colleague's complete lack of manners, and it's then that you give her what she wants. You tell her that Mami should know exactly where the butler costume had been bought, and chances are the shop should still have the measurements to make an exact replica. It's also then that you give her a bit of advice that you're sure that would make her relationship with Kyoko a bit more interesting. OF course, you make certain that it's carefully-worded enough that it doesn't reveal just how you discovered it.

Yeah, you told her about the soul gem thing.

"...What? What are you talking about?" Sayaka's voice is tinged with confusion. "You dropped your Soul Gem into some booze, and then you tried to lick it clean? What happened then? Murderf--er, Matsuda? What happened?"

Your only response is silence as you wait for her to get it.

"...Oh. OH." It takes her a few seconds to arrive at the conclusion you want her to. "Uh...I...wow. I didn't...I didn't know that." Sayaka is clearly surprised at this.

Noir is allowed to have comedy in it, provided it's very grim. By no means am I advocating the silly idea of having Midori's gem licked by either us or Misaka on the plane, but some of you do take this game too seriously.

We need these moments of brief comedy and hope to show that there still might be a chance for Chiaki to pull herself together and live a better life, that way it's all the more depressing when it all comes tumbling down.

Really? Now it's your turn to be surprised. You thought that they'd be the first to find out about them, seeing as she's obviously shacking up with Kyoko.

"W-what? N-no, we don't..." Sayaka's confusion easily gives way to indignation, and then to anger. "We do it normally, Murderface! NORMAL! We don't...we don't experiment or anything! And we're just fine with that! N-not that it's any of your fucking business--"

You tell her to calm down, while trying to stifle laughter. Any other time, you'd be returning Sayaka's epithets with some of your own, but this is just hilarious. You manage to get another sip of your soda before telling the flustered girl at the other end of the line that you didn't mean anything by the comment, and that you're sure she'll know what to do with the information you just gave her.

"...Whatever, Murderface. I hope your plane crashes." A moment of silence. "Bring Kyoko something nice, alright? No booze. One of those furry hats with the red star on the front. She likes that kind of stuff."

You manage a smirk before telling her goodbye.

"Yeah. See you. Don't hurry back."

The call ends, and you give a small sigh as you finally put the phone back down on the counter. Talking to Sayaka always tires you out, somehow. There's no middle ground to the girl - one moment she's agreeable, the next she's your worst enemy. It's so that even Kyoko, who's supposed to be the more hot-tempered of the two, is actually the reasonable one.

Being in a relationship probably does that to people, you decide. Changes them until you can't recognize them anymore.

You're not too sure if you want that.

What do you do?

You decide to step away from the bar. You leave enough money for the entire bottle of whiskey plus a hefty tip, before you slip off of the bar stool and get back on your feet carefully. You're still a bit buzzed from all the drinking, but getting up and moving about should help getting rid of the unsteadiness. If anything, it'd get the alcohol out of your bloodstream much more quickly.

You make your way towards the airport's souvenir shops. Some reading material would be nice - you're curious as to how the media would actually report what happened in the mansion. You don't pay attention much to the news on TV anymore - it's easy enough for anyone with enough money to get specific news bits to be omitted or censored completely. Newspapers, on the other hand, are a bit harder to buy out.

You reach the row of souvenir shops before too long, and without bumping or falling into anyone, too. You'd give yourself a pat on the back for that, but instead you go to the souvenir shop with a news stand and pay for a newspaper. You unfold it after you get your change, peering down at the rather lurid headlines.

The pictures are decidedly gory, with full-color photos of the pile of bodies you yourself created in that ballroom hall. The eyes of the corpses, funnily enough, are concealed by black bars, and the really gruesome bits ran through a mosaic filter. Typical sensationalist stuff. You skim through the article quickly - there's no mention of anything about Kilgore, his concubines, or the operators he hired. Certainly nothing about a maid, her butler friend, her pet armored giant, and the eleven-foot tall monster they nearly tore down the mansion in trying to waste.

That's...as close as you'll get to seeing an assignment being reported. No one can make something like that disappear like Kyuubey - for all you know he sent his Culexus squad to wipe a few minds clean of what they saw that night, the poor bastards. You've heard that some of them actually have enough mastery over their abilities that they can affect human minds, too, not just Magical Girls.

You look through the other pages. Nothing else much of note, and you fold the broadsheet a few times and tuck it under your arm.

i don't think we could go wrong with adult doujin (are those shops normal on airfields?) i imagine Siberia to be quite lonely but i don't know a damn thing about what its like up there.
Snacks are a good bet because surely they don't have the same stuff as us out there.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

If only Mami could see you now.

It's not for you, of course. That fact should be made clear right at the outset.

No, it's for the people about to suffer your presence in a hidden Research and Development base in Siberia - specifically, your arms dealer's older brother. An only-recently dependable young man, who, according to a very unimpeachable source, had spent half his lifetime being a typical shut-in who prefers the second dimension to the real thing. Figures, PVC statues and hug pillows seem to have been involved, along with seasonal trips to Comiket.

It's...not something you haven't seen before. Some of your past clients had been concerned parents who wanted some additional security for their misbegotten progeny; additional security preferably someone of the female persuasion and existing in the third dimension.
That was your first mission, and you actually tried to be sympathetic. Hell, you actually allowed one of them to try and hold your hand - but it went downhill really quickly when your client to get fresh with you just as you were trying to get yourselves into an extraction point, with a kill-team hot on your heels.

You had to call Mami to stop yourself from saving your pursuers the effort.

But despite that, you try not to be too hard on those perverts, even when one of their less-restrained groups had gone out and raped an idol to the point of her committing suicide, and nearly got her best friend in on it too.

You're simply much too familiar with the concept of trying to remove yourself from reality - the reality that you've deemed too much of a hassle to deal with - to judge. It's just that your means and theirs are different - they have their two-dimensional wives and girlfriends, you have alcohol and over-the-counter painkillers.

And no, the difference doesn't make you any less pathetic.

No less of a failure.

Who are you, then, to look down on that subset of the population that you honestly identify with?

You think upon this as you behold the highly-decorated front of the store itself, glancing at the smiling, well-proportioned beauties winking coquettishly from their glossy paper and pillowcase prisons. Staring past the display that proclaimed that all new trap mangas were at 50% off, and that one can get two bottles of onahole lubricant for the price of one.

When you look at the big picture, you really do suck.

You must have been navel gazing for quite a long time that the shop's attendant - a young woman, from the looks of it, wearing the Toranoana clerk apron proudly above casual clothes, her short bowl-cut hair framing two wide brown eyes and an innocent smile - actually steps out of the shop itself to talk to you. A concerned expression on her bespectacled visage.

"Um, excuse me, but is there something particular you're looking for?" She smiles at you. Her nameplate identifies her as Yuri<3, complete with a heart symbol at the end. "We have a very diverse stock inside, not all of them is visible from the front display. It's alright to come in and look!"

Why don't we just ask her for whatever stuff a teenaged boy would want, rather than have Homura try to figure out what somebody of the opposite sex would want?
Also, something for the future: make Midori promise to never tell the actual story behind the Soulgem licking business. (Did Midori promise that, if need be, she'd keep our secrets, taking the assistant/newbie/life-debt thing very seriously? If yes, this is simple enough as she's serious about confidentiality already. If not, no big deal, just make her promise to keep the secret.)

She goes with the cover story of how it happened: that Homura accidentally discovered it while drinking out of the same cup she'd put her own Soulgem in, and so Homura ended up licking Homura's Soulgem.

Midori, seeing the results, decided to copy Homura and test it out herself.

That's the story, and you're sticking with it Midori.

You blink at this seemingly aggressive and upfront way of salesmanship. This wouldn't be out of place, really, in a supermarket or in a convenience store. You've been accosted before by such well-meaning attendants, cheerfully and politely insisting that you MUST try this sample of the new cup ramen that they're peddling, or avail of the day's special promo where you could potentially win exciting prizes through lottery draws, which you almost always end up losing.

It's nothing you're not used to, that much is sure. What you're not used to, of course, is that the same approach that you've been persuaded to purchase cheap, junky instant noodles is being used to persuade you to buy filthy pornography.

You clear your throat after a few moments, before murmuring something to her, suddenly unable to meet her warm, inviting gaze.

"I'm...sorry, I don't think I got all of that. Did you say that you were buying a gift for someone...?" She blinks up at you, and it's only now that you notice that she's a few inches shorter than you. Not quite as short as Misaka, but enough that she's looking up, and you see yourself reflected in her brown eyes as she leans closer.

You avert your eyes again and nod.

It's then that 'Yuri<3' smiles a bit wider and claps her hands. "That makes it much more simpler, then! Let's step into the shop proper so we can have accommodate you." It's then that she leans in closer, uncomfortably so, and whispers into your ear.

"Don't worry. I can tell it's your first time. We'll get you want your 'friend' wants, and she'll be very happy!"

She draws back, beaming, before taking your hand and pulling you forward, into the shop proper. Tugging you along with a surprising strength that you can't help but allow yourself to be dragged.

"My name's Yuri! The heart sign says you have to say it extra nice, alright? What's yours?" She says this over her shoulder, beaming at you.

You manage to stutter your first name before the shop finally swallows you both in its hedonistic jaws.

What did you get yourself into, this time?

I thought we told (or implied) Sayaka that we licked our OWN soulgem clean. We didn't know what would happen ahead of time -- I don't think we were expecting an orgasm?-- so yeah, it was an accidental discovery to begin with.

We just make sure that the story is that we tried this on our own Soulgem first, while Midori was around and decided to try it herself too.

Uhh... We did not know what licking a Soulgem would do. We know BREAKING it would kill you. We also know what shooting yourself in the head does.

We had discovered that dunking a Soulgem could make the Puella Magi drunk. So we tried to see what else can happen, and it turned out that licking it gives an orgasm.

Now, if you're going to be honest and be a mature adult about things, you would fully admit that the inside of a Toranoana branch shop is, in fact, not all that bad. In fact, it's actually more well-organized and free of clutter than you expected.

The entire shop is one long aisle, with the layout made just so that a casual buyer can easily browse while walking. The goods on sale are in properly-labeled, easy-to-reach shelves and appealingly tidy displays. A full examination of the selection available made by just strolling through and making your way back to the entrance.

Just like a convenience store. Except instead of overpriced snacks and drinks in, say, aisle one, instead there's schoolgirl pornography and bottled artificial female bodily fluids.

No one else seems to be in the shop with you for the moment, and you give thanks for that small mercy.

"So, Chiaki-san." Yuri (with the <3) says as she turns neatly on her heel to face you. "Do we know what your friend is into? We have a really wide selection, thanks to all the kinds of interests people are getting into, these days." She looks you up and down, before tilting her head slightly to the side. "...Maybe Magical Girls? Is your friend into magical girls, Chiaki-san? We have a lot of material concerning them, but they're heavily tied into the tentacle stuff..."

How do you respond?

"...Right." A rather warm and cute smile quirks up the corners of the shop attendant's lips, and you see the temptation of breaching your privacy through certain pointed questions dancing in her eyes. Nothing seems to come out of it, though. "No Magical Girls, no Maids, and certainly no incest. Anything else that a healthy young man in his twenties that may have not been spending as much time as he should outdoors may be interested in. Got it." She nods again. "That narrows down our choices some, actually. If you'll follow me, Chiaki-san?"

You do so as she leads you deeper into the shop, the scent of newly-printed books quite refreshingly strong in the air, alongside what seems like Yuri<3's own perfume. It's a rather nostalgic scent, one you've breathed in with relish before. You just can't place what it is or where you've sampled it, but it's vaguely fruity. Not at all bad.

"We may as well look at the most popular stuff we have, Chiaki-san, with the exceptions that you've noted kept in mind." Yuri<3 gestures to the biggest display shelf to your right. "Netorare or NTR is one of our top sellers," The attendant says, her dainty fingers brushing along the shrink-wrapped cover of Tomodachi, Where's My Waifu?.

"A mainstay of course is anything related to schoolgirls, that never really gets out of style." She waves the same hand towards a large stack of manga lovingly titled Nice Boat, featuring schoolgirls doing everything from playing light music to doing their taxes.

Yuri<3 then nods towards another shelf, where 'Swordswoman Asses Only' and '-4 STR' is featured quite prominently. "We've also seen quite a resurgence in High Fantasy stuff. Monstergirls, women in bikini armor...it's been a niche interest for the longest time, but now it's in full force. I think this is the safest choice, Chiaki-san, as not only it offers the mainstream appeal of Vanilla, but it spices it up with something new without being a bit too...out there, you know?" She grins at you.

"Of course, if you really want to be risky with the entire deal, and you look like a person who takes risks often - you can always buy into some of the niche material we have." She gestures to a rather tall pile of books. "Material related to traps or boys dressing up as girls are our most popular niche, but they're not selling as much as they used to, hence the promo."

It's then that she smiles, again, and places both hands on her hips.

"Now, what'll it be, Chiaki-san?"

What do you buy for Misaka's older brother?

You're a risk-taker, sure, but you make it a point never to gamble with your dignity - only with your life and maybe with your money (if the payoff is good enough, that is). So you go with her recommendation as the safest option, nodding towards the display of books featuring scantily-clad girls with swords and slavering male protagonists touching fluffy tails.

"Ah, a fine choice, Chiaki-san." Yuri<3 smiles, seemingly glad that you've played right into her hands by following her suggestion. She steps towards the stack you indicated and immediately picks up five full-color books, all of them hard-bound. "I'll get you the top-reviewed books in that series and ring it up as a gift set. That'll be around 5000 yen, plus another 500 for the giftwrapping. Would you want to avail of our Touch Fluffy Tail promo? For another 500 yen, we'll toss in a limited-edition pillowcase cover of -4 STR's most popular heroine, ElfSlave Watdo-chan! Comes in hypoallergenic polyester and the print's guaranteed to remain intact and vibrant even with moisture damage or rough play!"

You blink at her, trying to catch up with her sheer enthusiasm, before you finally give up and nod. Sure, a pillowcase. Why not. They still use pillows up there in Siberia, right? Or do they just use bear fur for everything?

"Alright. Please give me a few moments, Chiaki-san, and I'll have everything ready for you. And what will be our method of payment for this transaction?"

You wordlessly give her your cash card, and she accepts it almost reverently. "Alright, Chiaki-san. A moment and I'll get back to you. Please, feel free to look around while you wait! I won't be too long!"

You make for the Magical Girl section. Gothique's all well and cute, but you're not quite into the frill-infested costumes and faux pipe-smoking the privileged female protagonists get up to. Marine biology's not your thing, either. You don't see the appeal of molluscs and oysters in your pornography, and just looking at the titles on display gives you a salty, briny taste in your mouth.

Ah. Here they are. You intentionally skip the titles that even so much as hint at cephelapod involvement, which is easy enough considering that the many-tentacled creatures feature quite prominently on the covers. Some of them are based on existing franchises, with quite the amusing titles. Futa Wa Penis Cure is one example. Cock Captor Sakura is another. Centering on the subjugation and comeuppance delivered to Magical Girls by way of well-endowed faceless men.

You go for the more interesting ones - the ones that feature Magical Girls having fun with other Magical Girls.

It's only after a few more shelves of such heretical material that you come upon a particularly-interesting title. One featuring a young, green-haired Magical Girl with the power to make anyone fall in love with her - and her Magical Girl love interest, one with short black hair, thick crimson glasses, and a perennial frown on her face. The title of the book is called The Adventures of Miracle Midori and Murder Mayumi, and it proudly boasts that it's been reprinted quite a number of times. The author's name, suspiciously enough, is Green Green.

You take a moment before pulling it out of the shelf and looking at it.

No. That's impossible. It's...no. That's patently ridiculous.

You try to lie to yourself more just as you hear Yuri<3 come up behind you, all smiles.

"Chiaki-san! Your purchase, receipt, and card!" The shop attendant chimes as you turn to face her, a discreet pink paper bag without any label or logo of any sort thrust into your hand, the opening stapled shut. Your card and the receipt placed gently on top of your palm. "Oh, and I see you've been looking at one of our more popular releases!" Yuri<3's smile widens as she plucks the book from your hand. "This we're particularly proud of - do you know that the author actually resides here, in Mitakihara? She's quite the reclusive one as she's turned down our offers for signing sessions, but she did confirm that she does live in our very own city!"

That...well, that's just great, then. Good to hear it.

"I take it you're interested, then?" Yuri's smile is wide, but it falls just a bit. "But I've already rung up your purchases, so..." she falls silent for a moment, before smiling again. "Ah! Well, the Toranoana Virgin bonus is still valid, so please, take that as a gift for purchasing from us for the first time!"

You blink at this in surprise, and make to ask what the hell kind of bonus is that - but you shake your head and nod, instead. It's better this way, you think. Let the warp overtake you. Do not resist it.

Yes, this is a good pain.

"Oh, and if you have time, please visit the snack shop beside us! That coupon gives you 40% off their most popular chocolate bar, Broblerone!"

You nod, and it's then that you make your way out of the shop.

You have just purchased pornography. This is a new low, even for you.

Well, uh. How does this sort of thing happen?

... IS this sort of thing happening? I mean, is this real and with some weird reason behind it? Or are we dreaming? Or in some kind of illusion?

Anyway... When was the book made, and does it say anything about the author?

What can we do with our control over Midori's Soulgem again? That is, can we sense where she is with it? Or look through her eyes or otherwise borrow her senses? I'm thinking of doing a reality check, starting by seeing if we can tell where Midori is...

Next step is, uh... maybe look at something with numbers? Supposedly numbers don't stay the same in dreams, and they're nonsensical. So if you check a watch in a dream, it gives weird numbers, and isn't consistent moment to moment.

At any rate, it probably means its time to apply some more brain bleach courtesy of the esteemed Mr.Kong.

Side note, I wonder if Mayumi was one of the names that Chiaki went through during those two years where she was coming up with a new name every time she forgot who she was.

Hmm. This is kind of odd; this... ah, work of speculative romantic fiction, seems to sell very well and has been reprinted many times.

If the author is who we think it is, then perhaps Midori is not as destitute as she initially let on? She surely would have made enough to pay the bills at the very least, unless her parents run the Japanese equivalent of those restaurants regularly featured on Kitchen Nightmares or such.

You transfer the bag o' porn to your free hand as you stuff The Adventures of Miracle Midori and Murder Mayumi into your inventory with your other. You're going to have to confront Midori about it sooner or later, but damned if you're going to be seen reading it in public. Your hedonism has its limits, and your disregard for what other people think of you is no exception.

Other people being the blonde-haired goddess of victory that has certain views about such material, of course.

You take out your smartphone and dial Midori's number just as you walk towards the snacks shop - and in contrast to the walk-in Toranoana branch shop, it's more of a stall than anything else, and the grumpy-faced attendant nods at your coupon before gesturing towards the stack of Broblerone candy bars.

You hold up the phone to your ear while examining one of the bars for sale - it has quite the fetching mascot on its cardboard packaging, a blue-haired girl smiling up happily at the viewer. Black bars plastered over her otherwise clotheless frame.

Midori answers your call just as you hold up three fingers to the attendant, who nods and accepts your cash card.

"W-wait, Misaka-chan! Don't bother the nice engineers--H-hello, Matsuda-sempai? Sorry, but is it okay if you--MISAKA-CHAN!"

"MISAKA DOES WHAT MISAKA WANTS! BROCCOLI HEAD CANNOT STOP MISAKA!"

Seems that your subordinate has her hands full.

What do you do?

You nod in thanks as the snacks stall attendant gives you back your card, your receipt, and your purchase of three highly suspect chocolate bars. At the same moment, you ask Midori to get Misaka on the line. The eccentric arms dealer always had her moods - she was still a child, after all, and there's no getting around that. At the very least, you know that she listens to you.

"Murderface!" Misaka all but screams into your ear, making you wince and pull the device back. "Please be telling Broccoli Head to stop trying to order Misaka around! This one just need to talk to the ground engineers - OF COURSE MISAKA KNOWS HOW TO READ, THAT SAYS OFF LIMITS! IT IS FOR STUPID PEOPLE ONLY!"

You let Misaka get her tantrum well on the way before speaking three words. Three words that gets the young arms dealer to stop right in her tracks, all trace of her earlier hyperactivity erased.

"...Chocolate? You bought Misaka chocolate?"

Yes, you did, and if Misaka stopped trying to get Midori arrested, you'll give her half your share, too.

"Nrgh...fine, fine. Misaka will behave. But only because Murderface asked! A-and don't forget about what you said! Misaka is always sad whenever Murderface forgets!"

Of course you won't forget. You ask her then to put Midori back on.

In the rate this is going we won't go on the plane until next time, however when we do. I think we should ask Midori some questions.

1) When did you find out that you hadn't signed up to be sailor moon?

2) What your relationship with your parents? (she doesn't seem that concerned about them, she has been gone for more then a week)

3) What is your incubators name?

If she tires to dodge the question, mentioned that you don't feel like tell QB and she asked for your trust. It would be hypocritical for her to not trust you with her former employers name.

"...Wow. Seriously, Matsuda-sempai. You should really take up daycare, she just went from a hundred miles per hour to zero flat! How do you do it?"

You tell her to set that aside, and ask her where they are right now.

"W-well, er, we're at one of the main hangars, here. I managed to, uh, convince one of the guards on duty to let us through the maintenance gate. Don't ask how." She clears her throat. "Anyway, she's been running around asking questions, and I think she got one of them really mad at one point. I managed to drag her away before anything happened -- and then you called."

Ah. That explains it. In any case, you tell her to get Misaka back into the terminal proper, so that all three of you would be ready when your flight is called.

"Will do, Matsuda-sempai. Is there anything else?"

Is there? How do you reply? You probably would want to bring up the suspicious doujin at this time.

Eh. We don't particularly need the name. QB has description, MO, mannerisms, and a reasonable idea of the name of it's primary magical girl team.

If it really was her, this is a fun minion.

You shake your head, a small smile on your face. "No, that's probably about it. Just checking in," you say. "Although you should probably be heading back towards the terminal fairly shortly...'Miracle Midori'."

Silence. Complete and utter silence. All you can hear is her breathing, which itself seems to catch immediately after you uttered those two last words.

"S-Sempai, it's not what you think--" It's after a few moments that a torrent of panicked words suddenly gush out from the other end of the line, each one laced with fear and desperation - and you end the call before she could say anything more. You place the phone back into your inventory, satisfied for now - and you surreptitiously pull out the suspicious doujinshi, picking carefully at the shrinkwrapped cover while you find a nice place to sit.

You're...just reading to pass the time. Yes. Until your flight is called.

You find an unoccupied bench overseeing the plane hangars, and you seat yourself there. You place the bag of pornography on your lap as you continue to carefully peel off the membranous plastic cover off of the luridly-drawn book.

You almost get to spreading its pages - to part its awaiting folds - when you feel something perch upon your shoulder. A familiar presence.

"What are you reading, Chiaki Matsuda? Aren't you a bit old for that sort of thing?"

Kyuubey. Figures.

"Too young?" You feel Kyuubey squirm slightly on your shoulder as he gets a bit more comfortable perching himself there, and you try to stop yourself from slapping him off with the doujin you're now stuffing back into your inventory. "No, no, I meant too old. Such books are only meant for the consumption of those much too young to absorb and appreciate proper literary prose, aren't they? I mean, look at them - each page is wrought with exagerrated art! Not enough words in it to form even a single paragraph - just dialogue, nothing else!"

You blink for a moment, before you realize that Kyuubey is in fact talking about comic books in general - not just this kind. You ask him if there's anything wrong with older people perusing such reading material.

"Well, no. I wouldn't say so. I let anyone under my employ read whatever they so choose." Kyuubey turns to look at you with its disturbing, unblinking gaze - and you can only manage to hold it up close for a few moments before turning away. "Take that particular book you were holding, for example. I've seen copies of it being read fervently by quite a number of the girls in the office, as well as its other volumes. I have yet to pass a memo disallowing it from the office proper, and it will stay that way." The Incubator seems almost proud to say this.

Well, that's all well and good--wait. Did he just say...?

"In any case. I'm here to give you a briefing about what you might expect in Siberia. Unless, of course, you have questions first?"

"Ah, yes, those. We've analysed them, and as it turns out, they are completely identical to your Desert Eagle and Kirika Kure's sword - which confirms its existence as a Golden Weapon." Kyuubey hops off your shoulder in a neat jump, landing on the floor and turning to face you.

"Testing revealed the bangles as having the same exact parameters as the other two weapons, but we identified a certain characteristic that neither the Desert Eagle or the sword had - the bangles change their shape depending on the current wearer. This means that they may take a drastically different form when you're wearing them, Chiaki Matsuda, so keep it in mind when you're training in them."

Training...? Isn't that something QB would want you to avoid, seeing as they do corrupt their users? For all you know you've already been turned by the prolonged amount of exposure you had with the Desert Eagle. And besides, Vindicare aren't supposed to worry about close combat, are they?

"That's what Vindicares are, more or less. But that's why I'm sending you to Siberia, besides seeing if the stopgap measure we've developed works in retarding the corruption of the Golden Weapons. I'm temporarily suspending your Vindicare rank - effective today, you are to be considered as a Warmaster-in-Training."

What? But...you remember that it was Mami who was supposed to be on her way to becoming Warmaster. Why you...?

"Exemplary performance during your recent assignments. A bit of an exagerration, I admit, but you have quite the support backing you. It also helps when you're the popular vote. I have no idea why, but there you go."

I think that's a definite improvement over her Murderface days, but I'm not sure if that really warrants a promotion to a very high rank. What kind of game could QB be playing at here? Is he wanting to make an example out of Chiaki?

The name makes you freeze. The Betrayer? You...you feel like you should remember something like that, but nothing comes to mind. If anything, it sounds like a rather foreboding moniker.

"The very same." Kyuubey nods. "In fact, she volunteered, and I hear she's quite eager to get started. Give her my regards when you meet her, and try to be a good student. I know how much of a problem you have with figures of authority."

You look down at the Incubator, narrowing your eyes at him. You wonder if this is some sort of trick.

"As for the method, well, you'll have to consult the person in charge of that. I forget his name, but I do know that he's related to your arms dealer. Try to cooperate with whatever he asks - he knows what he's doing, and I've made it expressly clear how important you are to the Officio."

You nod. You don't find it all that reassuring, but it's something.

"Is there anything else you wish to ask at this point in time, Matsuda?" Kyuubey asks, tilting its head slightly to the side as it looks up at you.

How do you respond?

>To QB:

Ask QB about who exactly supported our rise to Warmaster rank.

>speculation
QB knows that Mami is another golden weapon user, although Chiaki doesn't. By doing this, he may want to purposefully stress-test both Mami and Chiaki at the same time; Chiaki will have to deal with all the work-related stress of being a visible and high-ranking leader, and also the stress of a misanthropic magical girl dealing with all the popularity that goes along with it.

In the meantime, Mami sees that Chiaki is moving on up in the world. While she's going to be happy that Chiaki is doing well for herself, there's got to be a part of her that feels resentment over being passed over (despite her voluntary retirement) and seeing Chiaki being rewarded so lavishly for killing Kirika (despite Kirika being thoroughly corrupted by the golden katana).

Best case scenario: Chiaki lives up to be an exemplary Warmaster, and gets the golden weapon/Faust situation under control. Mami deals with her issues, and relinquishes her golden musket without a fuss.

Worst case scenario: Mami and Chiaki go full-on FLESH OF FALLEN ANGELS ALL DAY ERRYDAY. But QB will have gathered some very valuable data regarding the corruption, which will certainly give him some insight into the mystery that is Faust.

"Tell my co-pilot I'll be there in 5 minutes. I have... things on my mind." The stewardess exits the room.

I'm still affected by the dream. Spooked, even. It's... a strange feeling. I shrug it off. I've got a plane to fly. Being disturbed isn't a good thing.

My mind wanders back and forth for a bit. It settles on a very familiar memory.

The day we first met.

Strange as it may seem, I am not a bodyguard. My stock in trade has always been in computers. Hacking, cybersecurity, cyberwarfare, that kind of thing. So it was a bit of a shock that QB called me in to do a bodyguarding job for him.

The job? It was, for lack of a better term, babysitting the Emperor of Japan. I don't remember the briefing much. Something to do with magical beasts wanting to eat him or something.

He was a gentle sort. A genial old man who liked studying marine life. Even gave me a tour of the Imperial Palace. And introduced me to his family. I could not fathom how anyone, or anything, would want to take his life. The crazy right-wingers, probably, but I distinctly remember them being respectful of him as well. That, and a conveniently-placed bomb some time before. I was quite pleased with that.

I had thought it was a boring job. And it would have ended without incident too, if it wasn't for what happened next.

A banshee. A screaming wraith from... Ireland? Scotland? In Japan. And it was after my principal. Damn that QB. He wasn't kidding about the supernatural stuff.

It was several tense moments of horror as the banshee ripped apart the Emperor's bodyguards like a hot knife through butter. There was no way I could take it out. QB had promised backup. Where was it?

Without warning, a golden light pierced the banshee. Then, another. And another. Before I knew it, the damned ghost was gone.

I look up. On the roof was.. a girl with blonde locks. Dressed rather strangely. She did a short leap and landed elegantly near where I was.

"You could have come a bit earlier." I grouched, showing her the carnage the banshee had wrought. Her response was... interesting. There was a smile on her face, though I thought it looked a bit off. Like it was forced.

"Well, I'm sorry for that. If you have any complaints, please take it up with QB." Her answer was cold, restrained, yet very polite. Then again, I've never really worked with QB's field agents.

I am shaken out of my reverie by my co-pilot. "Captain, the pre-flight checks are done. All systems go."
"Uh, good. Have you submitted our flight plan to Control?" I ask.
"All done. We're clear to fly." he replied.
"Okay, good. We'll just have to wait, then."

I'm late, yes, but I wanted to point out how spot on this potentially is. QB's goal here is to figure out what Faust is doing. We're connected to that through the Golden Weapons. I honestly think we are totally expendable in his eyes as long as he figures out whats going on.

So, yes. He'll promote us and get use to tri-wield Golden Gear in order to hasten Fallen Angel mode if that's what it takes in order for him to crack the case.

Kyubei ALWAYS PLAYS THE LONG GAME, people. Remember; he's got more important things to worry about then us.

NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and you're currently waiting for your flight to Siberia with a bag of porn on your lap.

Well, it's not just porn that's in the bag, no. There's also a shrink-wrapped plyester pillowcover there, depicting a blushing tearful blonde elf with her skimpy clothes in disarray. Frozen in time, mere seconds away from an earth-shattering session of coitus with her unseen lover.

Oh, and there's the three bars of drug-laced chocolate that you bought at 40% off. You can't forget that.

Why do they leave you alone with money, again? You should probably just stick to buying alcohol and painkillers. At least that's just a bit less depressing.

Questionable gift shopping aside, you were mere moments away from investigating a particularly suspicious doujin that you've gotten free in an equally suspicious-sounding promo when your boss - a white mutant cat who always seemed to look smug despite not being able to change the expression on its otherwise mascot-like face - came into the scene, perching himself upon your shoulder. Your ensuing conversation with him began as awkward and stilted as always, and it looked to be that way until he told you two things: the first being that your rank had now been changed from Vindicare to Warmaster-in-Training, and the second being that someone named The Betrayer would be starting your training posthaste.

The Betrayer. The title is certainly ominous, but you don't remember anyone in the Officio bearing it. Nothing comes to mind - although, for the briefest of seconds, the silhouette of someone with long black hair, crimson-pinned black eyes, and elongated, skeletal claws for fingers come unbidden in your mind.

You narrow your eyes down at the Incubator in front of you and ask the most obvious question.

"Who is...?" Kyuubey tilts his head to the side, confusion coloring his voice. "Are you asking me who the Betrayer is, Matsuda?"

You nod. What else could you be asking? Is there something wrong with it?

"Well...no. Not as such. It's just that you're the last person I expected to ask that question." The Incubator's tail flicks lazily from side to side.

"She was, after all, your partner for the better part of last year. She even gave you that horrible nickname of yours. Murderface, was it?"

Your partner...? Huh. You don't...you don't remember.

How do you react?

"Ah, yes, your convenient, if selective amnesia." Kyuubey breaks off his stare with you to calmly lick the back of its paw. The little cat bastard was grooming himself in front of you. "It's always struck me as strange, your episodes. Sure, you do forget certain things, but some of your memories have always remained constant. Like your association with Mami Tomoe, for instance. Or your obsession with drinking and painkillers. Or your long-standing enmity with Miki Sayaka."

You give an irritated grunt and nudge at the self-grooming Incubator with the toe of a shoe. It's the kindest way, under the circumstances, for you to tell him to get on with it.

"Yes, yes." Kyuubey blinks. "The Betrayer. Her real name is Valnikov Kharn. Five years of active service. She started out as a Vindicare for two years, transferred to Eversor at the third, and achieved full Warmaster Rank at the fourth. She abdicated the position at the latter half of her fifth year - and that was when I assigned her to be your partner. Your partnership lasted six months before she...voluntarily retired from active duty and volunteered to serve in our Siberia R&D branch as an assistant."

You're not sure, but you sense a bit of hesitation in Kyuubey's voice as he recounted the last days of Kharn's career.

"I probably shouldn't be surprised that you forgot, or that you decided to block that six-month period of your career away to oblivion." If the Incubator had shoulders, he'd have probably shrugged by now. "You didn't part ways amicably. But I have to admit, for a novice, you were her perfect partner. I don't think I've ever seen a pair clear out an entire building of hostiles faster than the both of you working together."

You shake your head after a moment. You're not too sure what they mean, but from what you can infer, there may be twenty of the damn things out in circulation. With three currently in this Officio's possession - or at least that you know of - that makes seventeen of the evil things still out there. And as Kilgore had proven, the owners may not be strictly confined to the Magical Girl demographic.

"...I see. I'll see about advising the rest of the girls about them, should they come upon such weapons. I'll also check with our competitors, see if they know anything about them."

You nod at this, before two remaining questions pop up from your memory. You ask them immediately, before they sink back into oblivion, to be buried underneath other, less relevant queries.

"The Witch that spawned in Mami's apartment? Ah, yes. It appears that she was a former contractee of Hanegawa Midori's original Incubator. I've yet to pin down his location, but rest assured I've got people on this case. No one wants a rogue Incubator running amok in Mitakihara."

And the name?

"There is no official record of any Akemi Homura in Mitakihara, Matsuda. As far as the records go, she doesn't exist. Nothing in the national registry, either, if that's what you're about to ask." Another tilt of the head. "Did I satisfy your requests in a satisfactory manner, then? Anything else you'd like to ask, or am I free to ask for reimbursement, now?"

How do you respond?

Matsuda really needs to grill Midori on several aspects of that doujin. Such as why is she drawing it, for how long, and and how popular is it? Especially how popular is it in the Officio as Matsuda may need to Exterminatus the entire company.

Another thing to consider is that as Midori is apparently a crazed fan, when she stopped the neckbeards from raping Matsuda she may not have done it "from one professional to another". She hasn't really acted like a professional ever (see the stay in the car incident) and may have been instead planning on taking Matsuda home for herself. Hell, she probably has some creepy Muderface shrine hidden away somewhere.

Also, Matsuda needs to talk with Midori about that mission in general just so she knows what exactly happened and what was illusions so she can prepare to deal with Iori meeting Midori when the Russian trip is over.

Kyuubey seems to blink at your barrage of questions, and it takes him a moment to answer. "Well, I was going to ask for--" He glances around him, before sighing. "Nevermind. Forget I mentioned anything."

He starts to groom himself again. "From what I can recall from Mami's reports, you never really gave yourself a name until Kharn gave you one. After she found you in Charlotte's Witch barrier, you were never able to give yourself a name we could use in referring to you. We decided on simply calling you Girl A for the duration of your recovery. I placed you in active duty with Kharn as your partner and minder, and she immediately gave you your name, at your first meeting. It seemed to stick, despite obvious objections. You even remembered it, even when you started having your episodes."

Another tilt of the head. "You can understand our collective relief, then, when you decided to call yourself Chiaki Matsuda. Something that doesn't sound strange when we're talking about you in public."

He nods at the shield clamped on your right arm. "I have my own ideas regarding your shield, but they're all simple theories. I have nothing concrete to offer in the way of proof. For all I know, your shield places you in a dimension different than what we're on, instead of actually stopping time." He shrugs. "I was not responsible for your Wish, that much is clear."

It's then that the Incubator stretches, cat-like as usual. "If our little interview is done, Matsuda, then I will excuse myself. Your flight should be ready momentarily." A sigh. "Oh, and your new accommodations have been found. We'll move your belongings to it before you get back."

It seems that Kyuubey is getting ready to leave. You have an opportunity for one last question. What will it be?

Not really. We might be capable of softening a tad, and showing joy for perfect pancakes.

But showing actual love for someone, opening our already scarred and battered heart, coming out of the massive fortifications we've constructed out of painkillers, booze and emotional repression. Not that likely.

Misaka is okay, she's Misaka. She gives us guns we pat her head and tell her she did good. It's simple, it's little sistery, we can deal with that.

The moment someone actually tries to hold her hand in a loving way or god forbid go any further, we're going to freak the fuck out. We're getting better and acting closer to normal, but we're still pretty fucked up.

I tend to think of her as pretty self aware that she's broken. She isn't an idiot, she self medicates heavily, knows that she's bad news for anyone and is well aware that she keeps any relationships she has in very firm boundaries.

Misaka it's get guns, give head pats and tell her she did a good job. It's reciprocal, we can deal with that.

Mami provides pancakes/moral support and we care about her opinion but we don't really open up to her. We saw her as a safety net, no matter how far down we dropped due to our various addictions she would be there to pick us up, that's one of the reasons we got so fucking scared when we thought she was not going to abandon us, it meant that no one was going to stop us from taking a shovel and digging once we hit rock bottom.

But these relationships tend to be one sided, we take more than we give.

An actual two-sided romantic/emotional attachment would be completely alien to Chiaki, especially given how much effort she puts into dulling her emotions and keeping them under a very tight leash.

Chiaki knows she is broken and doesn't try to hide it, she hasn't tried to improve it because she so far has seen no need because there is nothing that lasts very long aside from her job and she has had routine work for as long as she can remember.

Now there is a consistent threat, danger to her friends and the first person aside from Mami she has ever met that thinks she isn't a waste of space and that is a massive shake up for her

She likes Misaka, she cares for her in her own odd way, but I don't think she's going to let it go any further than it already is.

I see their relationship at a nice, stable point that Chiaki doesn't want to futz with. It's consistent, reliable, it works.

On a related note, Iori. While I agree that we should have let her down, we could have done it much better than we did. She was looking to us for emotional support and honestly we couldn't give it.

Kyuubey seems to blink at this sort of question from you. "Well, this is a surprise. I feel that it's been a long while since you ever take anything from work seriously." He clears his throat, a surprisingly human gesture, before speaking again. "Becoming Warmaster means to have the highest rank in the Officio, Matsuda, second to the Officio's Incubator. A less bellicose version of the title and a much more accurate one means that you are to be my proxy, my right hand if you will. You will be overtaking certain duties that both Kharn and Mami had undertaken, and these duties are as important as they are delicate."

So a glorified secretary, then? You ask as you scowl at the mutant cat. You're not liking the job description, much.

"No, no. Not as such. Being Warmaster also means that you have authority over anyone underneath your rank - and that means everyone in my payroll is beholden to you. The resources of the Officio are at your command, to do with as you please. And you'll need them for those duties - all of which have more at stake and have farther reaching consequences than, say, protecting an idol."

He seems to smirk at you as he continues. "The Warmaster rank is not to be taken lightly. Only the deadliest and most powerful Magical Girls are considered for this rank. It should say something, then, that the position has been empty for the longest time - and Mami was still in the middle of her training before you replaced her."

It's then that the Incubator looks over your shoulder. "In any case, it looks like you can ask her yourself. I'll take my leave, then, Matsuda. I have business to take care of. Behave in Siberia."

"Chiaki-san." You turn at the voice, and see Mami in her black riding jacket, worn over a tasteful white blouse and conservative black skirt. She is carrying a rather stuffed wicker basket in one arm, and her helmet under the other.

And she is smiling at you, as if you were not yourself. As if you were not a broken-down wreck of a Magical Girl with a bag of porn on her lap.

You manage to smile at her, awkwardly, before pushing the bag of questionable material off of your lap and hiding it under the bench, behind your legs. This act of necessary concealment done just before she walks around the bench, taking a seat just beside you. Her soft, warm hip coming in contact with yours.

"I'm sorry if I'm a bit late, Chiaki-san. The traffic was just horrible!" Mami apologizes, shaking her head as she places the basket beside her on the bench, and her helmet on her lap. She looks you up and down, that pleasant smile still on her face as she does so - her amber eyes warm and devoid of the chilling formality that she'd treated you after the incident with Kirika. "Bumper to bumper! I couldn't even ride as fast as I wanted!"

They're each other's bitches, we're just their boss. Kyoko probably wears the pants most of the time, but I bet Sayaka takes charge every once in a while. Also if one of them has had one hellishly long day the other just takes care of them, no questions asked about who's in charge.

Note for when we become Warmaster. We should have our authority begin and end inside the confines of our job.

If it is work related we can throw commands around if needed, if it's outside of work we shouldn't use it. We don't get to use our authority to make Sayaka and Kyoko talk about intimate details of their relationship or to make Mami make us pancakes when she doesn't feel like it. And definitely no using it to acquire sexual favors.

Yes. Mami, despite her appearances, is a regular speed demon on two wheels. You're probably the only one who knows that, having had the pleasure of riding with her that one time. You couldn't believe how someone so...Mami-like could have such an appetite for GOES FAST like her.

"Well, how are you, then?" She leans close to you and sniffs. "Hmm. Kong Whisky, again. You know how I don't like you drinking, Chiaki-san, but at least I didn't find you roaring drunk in a public place." She shakes her head, a small sad smile on her face. "In any case, as promised. Dinner for all three of you. I made the portions extra large, and extra special. I also marked whose dinner is whose, so there's no confusion."

You nod slowly and thank her as you glance at the bulging wicker basket. You wonder how anyone in the world could survive without their own personal Mami Tomoe.

"No need to thank me, Chiaki-san. You've been through a lot these past few days, and..." She shrugs, making certain elements underneath her jacket bob slightly up as she smiles at you. "...I don't think I made it any easier on you." She reaches over to place her hand on yours. "About...about Kirika. I'm sorry, Chiaki-san. I thought I could somehow help her, but..." Mami shakes her head. "...I don't know how to gain back your trust in me, after having done something like that. If there's anything I can do to help you forgive me...please tell me and I'll do it, Chiaki-san."

Your personal blonde goddess of Victory is asking you for forgiveness.

I'm completely for Iori still, personally. I think it's important to us that Iori is the only one of our relations that is OUTSIDE of the network, that she's a civilian that has a view of the outside world. Especially if we go through with out promotion, I think it'll be important that we have someone keeping us grounded and getting too into our work.

I also think it's too late for her to avoid Pinky's gaze; it seems clear to me that Matsuda thinks she's someone important, as a friend if nothing else, otherwise we wouldn't have teared up so much when we had our little fight. Weather or not that goes further then friendship remains to be seen, but the flags been tripped already.

As for Misaka, Mami, and Midori, I don't know if they're the best fit. Misaka seems much more like little sister territory to me, while Mami is like our big sister. While some might be into that, I'm willing to bet that Matsuda (wow, lots of M names...) doesn't want that screwed up if she can avoid it. Relations COULD work, but it might just destroy her if they didn't work out.

Midori is going far to far into creepy stalker, for me. Do we really want a Yandare follow/girlfriend? Actually... don't answer that, I think I can guess people's thoughts on that question.

She knows that Mami has on numerous occasions nursed her back to health after combining massive quantities of painkillers and whisky, despite her disapproval of them she's just tried to get us back in decent shape. Not to even mention the whisky pancake debacle.

We are well aware that we fucked it up with Iori and we don't hate Iori, we don't like seeing her depressed. Mami is the only one we can really think of who might be able to help us with her.

Your eyes grow wide at this unexpected apology. It's...you're not sure where it came from, or why is it even happening, now. By all rights - by any leap of logic - it should be you doing the apologizing. It should be you asking for forgiveness. It should be you desperately trying to repair what little remains of the bridge between you and Mami.

You swallow painfully, finding your throat dry, and it's then that you manage to shake your head. You try to speak, and you're slightly horrified at how your voice is trembling.

You manage to tell her - after a few false starts, and a few moments of stark, uneasy silence - that there's nothing to forgive. That you should be the one apologizing in the first place. You...you should be thanking her, too, at that. You know that she'd given you more chances that you deserve, even when everyone else had long since given up on you - including the girl you sometimes forget the name of when you look at the mirror.

You work up a small smile, hoping to whatever god found it funny to put you in this situation that it looked sincere - and give it to Mami for as long as you can before you find yourself turning away. Turning your hand slightly underneath Mami's to clasp her fingers and squeeze it, gently.

Your first apology, both received and made. Your attempt at it is...pitiful, if you're going to be at all honest, but you hope it is enough.

Your only warning is a rustle of leather before you feel Mami wrap her arms warmly around you, pulling you into a hug.

You're...not used to this sort of physical contact. You're not. Any other person, you would have immediately stiffened up, pushed them off, and made damn sure they wouldn't have the temerity of touching you again like that for a very long time. But...but not Mami. Not in this case.

You actually feel tears pricking at the edges of your eyes as her warmth envelops you, pressing softly yet insistently against your chest, against your sides, against your back. Her nostalgic scent lacing every inhalation. Reminding you of home.

For one brief moment, you feel the safest you've ever felt. Something you've only felt only a handful of times in your life - the most recent being the moment before you passed out from blood loss after Kirika had relieved you of your favorite drinking arm. For one brief moment, the world didn't exist.

It's only too bad that it didn't last as long as you wanted it to, Mami pulling away after a while. Her eyes shining, wet with tears. These she wipes quickly away with her fingers, giggling awkwardly.

"I...I'm sorry, Chiaki-san. I know you're not into hugs, o-or any physical contact of the sort, but..." she smiles, again, with that smile that could make any idiot with a gun feel brave enough to take on an army. "...I'm just relieved that we're alright, again. Thank you. I promise not to give you any reason to doubt me again."

You take a moment to compose yourself as well, taking off your glasses to run a sleeve across your eyes, and then placing them back on.

It's a bit funny, but this is the second time you've shed tears in one day. It's not really that strange, of course, you've shed tears before, you're no unfeeling monster - but at the same time, it comes up so rarely that you might as well have lost the ability to. At the very least, you tell yourself, you're reminded that what little left of you that's sane is capable of human emotion.

It's there, while waiting for your flight during the now comfortable silence between you and Mami that you decide to take a risk. One that could...well, somewhat spoil things between you and her, but this is just as good a place as any, right?

Taking a deep breath, you open your mouth to ask her about what she felt about such a development. About you replacing her as Warmaster.

You only get a few syllables in before she completes the sentence for you.

"...What do I think about you being the new Warmaster, Chiaki-san?" Mami says smoothly as she turns to smile at you once more, now more energetically than before. "I'm very proud of you, of course! I'm relieved that my vote still counted, even though I was no longer in the running!"

Well, she's not angry. That's a good thing.

Wait, what?

Mami nods, still beaming. "I'm the one who put your name in as the new potential Warmaster, Chiaki-san. You should've seen everyone in the office light up when your name came up in the ballot - and I do believe it was a landslide victory! Everyone picked you over the other candidates!"

That's...that's good news, you suppose. You've always skipped Officio meetings like that - you're not the biggest fan of similar votes, except for the bit where Mami got nominated (and voted) Warmaster. But this...well. This was news.

You'd think by generally acting as yourself that you'd be at the very bottom of the list for anything that required resposibility, accountability and reliability. This was the Warmaster position they were talking about - not some goddamn class council position.

Why did she do that, you ask?

"Well, I..." Mami blinks at your question, before smiling sheepishly and clasping her gloved hands in front of her. "I'm sorry if you think it's a bit sudden, Chiaki-san, but there's a bit of a selfish reason why. I can't tell you just yet, but..." It's then that she takes both your hand in hers, lifting them up between them. "Half of that reason is that I want you to grow, Chiaki-san. You work very hard in your missions, no one can dispute that - but no one sees it, either. And you don't like to show it off, either. I want them to know and see just how good you are at being a Magical Girl, Chiaki-san, and how seriously you take this job." She leans in close. "I can't think of anyone else better to receive the rank than you, and I think you'll be the best Warmaster there is."

That's...how do you always end up making people expect better of you, while you've made it abundantly clear that you are horrible at everything?

Especially since she doesn't need to manipulate us. She's already done the ground work, and we'd do whatever she'd ask us to do. It's not like we're QB's little angel. If she gave us half a reason to work against him we'd be punting him through plateglass before she could finish the sentence.

It's then that Mami draws back, letting go of your hands. "Just remember to do your best in your training and on all your assignments from now on, Chiaki-san." Your personal goddess of luck smiles, again. "And please, try not to drink on the job. You can drink all you want at home, but never on active duty. It doesn't give out the best impressions."

You'll try your best, fine. But you're not a miracle worker. Especially not when said miracles involve curbing your habit of making a mockery out of your liver.

You nod again, mumbling something to the effect of assent - when suddenly the PA system of the airport rings out the message you've been waiting for all this time:

"Passengers for Charter Flight 117-B to Petropavlovsk-Kamchatsky, Siberia, please make your way to Gate 12. Repeat, Passengers..."

"That's your flight, isn't it?" Mami says as she gets up. "We'd better not keep them waiting, Chiaki-san. Come on, I'll see you off. They should let me through the gate, at least."

You nod as you follow suit - stopping for a few moments before bending down slightly to pick up the bag of pornography that you've hid from your blonde benefactor. She blinks at the bag, before crimsoning slightly as she looks up at you. She stays quiet about it, however, and instead starts to talk about how you should bundle up always in Siberia, as it's horribly cold, there.

Mami would choose us to rule through.
No one competent would.
You want someone who doesn't come up with ideas on their own, good or bad.
Chiaki would easily make bad decisions in regards to orders.
Mami also already was lined up for the position, so armchairing would be a massive ego hit.

But I wouldn't be surprised if she readily helped Chiaki with things she really can't handle.
It's half gaining power for her AND Chiaki, and half helping Chiaki grow.

You make your way to the numbered gate - and it leads right out to the tarmac, armed guards glancing your way before directing you to your flying coffin of choice, which is currently basking in front of its runway. The night lights reflected on its glossy, polished exterior.

From your limited experience with aircraft, it seems to be one of those Learjets. An 85, if memory serves you right. QB Heavy Industries' logo and name painted almost garishly on the side, denoting that it's owned by the company you work for. You also see Misaka and Midori standing by the automatic stairs, clearly waiting for you - the latter's eyes widening at your arrival, before looking away, clearly embarrassed.

You motion for them to go ahead up into the plane - and Misaka is all smiles as she races up the stairs, clambering in with the energy of a twelve-year-old. Midori follows closely behind, still red in the face, and you stop her for a moment before she could ascend.

She looks at you, terrified, before you hand her both the bag of pornography (with the suspicious chocolate bars inside) and the wicker basket Mami brought you, telling her to carry them into the plane. She nods at this, swallowing, before meekly making her way into the plane.

"Well, this is it, Chiaki-san." Mami says after Midori is well out of earshot. "Say hello to Miss Kharn for me, will you? And make sure to tell her about your promotion - I'm sure she'll be able to teach you a lot of things about being Warmaster. More than I ever could." She sniffs and wipes her eyes, again. "Don't let Misaka-chan play out in the snow for too long, and don't let go around Midori-chan unattended, okay?"

You say yes to all her requests, not sure if you could actually do them all, but you'll try.

How do you say goodbye?

You glance up the doorway leading into the Learjet, making sure that neither Misaka nor Midori is around to see you make a fool of yourself - before you step forward and take Mami into what could be the most awkward hug in the history of awkward hugs. She's taken by surprise, the helmet she's grasping dropping to the tarmac with a thunk, punctuating her sharp intake of breath - before she softens in your embrace and returns it.

She doesn't let go until you do, and she places a soft, warm kiss on you cheek before stepping back. That small smile on her lips once more.

"Chiaki-san, can you do me just one last favor?" She clasps her gloved hands before her. "Once you land, can you give the pilot a solid hit for me? Don't hurt him too much, just...something to teach him a lesson. Please?"

You blink at this request. Did the pilot do something bad to her? You'll settle it right now, if that's the case--

"O-oh, no, no. Just that I know the pilot, and he deserves it. But no, he didn't do anything to me, I promise. Just that he needs a good whack now and again."

You nod after a moment's confusion. It's a favor.

"Alright. See you when you get back, Chiaki-san. I'll miss you." Mami Tomoe waves at you as you finally make your way up the stairs, leaving her there on the tarmac. You say the same - and nearly add something about her pancakes. Focus, future Warmaster. Don't fuck up now.

You pull the plane door shut behind you, the locks automatically engaging. In the spacious cabin, Misaka is cheerfully cuddling what looks like a stuffed version of Tiny Pete, complete with foam tusks and spikes. Midori is in her own seat, carefully buckling herself up and clearly avoiding eye contact with you.

You settle into your seat as the pilot in his cabin begins to speak over the PA system, telling you to get ready for takeoff, and that fastening your seatbelts should be a priority. You do so, but not before taking out your own volume of Miracle Midori x Murder Mayumi, placing the shrinkwrapped manga on your lap.

You ignore the choking sound coming from Midori's seat as you secure your seat belts.

It's going to be an interesting flight, at least.

Eyes sleepy, Chiaki couldn't tell what had awoken her. She remembered getting back home late from a mission and crawling into bed, but by then the bar she had stopped at on the way back had kicked in.

Groaning a little, she attempted to roll over to check the time on the clock, but met resistance almost immediately. 'Ah'. It appeared like she had been glomped once she fell into bed. Reaching down, she pulled at the hands wrapped around her body, attempting to dislodge them a little.

'Uh uh.' Iori groaned sleepily from behind, apparently annoyed that she had been disturbed. Wiggling a little more trying to slip out, Chiaki sighed as the octopus grip tightened. Head thumping down in defeat, she decided that it wasn't worth it just to know how late she had come in this time.

Dozing off minutes later, visions of the most creative ways to main Kyubei pulling her back into slumber, she vaguely noted that the hands were moving, little spider steps slowly crawling up her skin. Pushing the thought aside, she decided that high explosive rounds would be perfect when she was suddenly yanked right back into full consciousness by the fingers stopping at mid chest, slowly playing with sensitive parts.

Stiffening in embarrassment, she tried to jerk forward to disentangle herself. She had gotten used to being cuddled during the night, but this was new! "He-hey! Quit that!" Pushing forward, the action only seemed to increase the pressure on her chest.

She couldn't get free. The hands seemed to only grip harder, stroke more insistently, cling more fiercely, and then a sultry breath of whisper in her ear... "Now, why would I do that Ho-mu-ra-chan?"

Chiaki froze cold.

"No, I think I like where I've got you." The stroking changed, fingernails lightly scraping her delicate skin.

"You certainly toyed with my heart back then, you know." The breath had slide lower, drifting over her neck.

"A girl's feelings are a delicate thing, not to be treated lightly." The words were murmured directly into the base of her neck, nuzzled into her collar.

"I think it's fair, then..." The fingers shifted, nails pricking at the center of her chest.

"Why can't I play with yours?" Chiaki gasped in pain, vision going white, as daggers tore open flesh and bone.

With a grunt of terror, she shot forward in her seat, gasping loudly in the quiet cabin, gripping her armrests in a white knuckle grip.

Misaka and Midori paused their argument, spinning around in their seats to look back at their friend with wide eyes. "Are... you alright Matsuda-sempai?" "Murderface, you fell asleep! Bad mares of the night time?"

Dragging in a deep breath of processed air, Chiaki blinked her eyes open, confirming that she was still on the plane to Siberia. Looking at the other two, she groaned a little, rubbing her temple with one hand. "Just... just a dream. I'm... I'm fine."

She glared at their concerned looks, grabbing her half full glass of lukewarm whiskey off the drink holder in front of her. Taking a big gulp, she closed her eyes and placed her forehead against the cool glass, trying to steady her breathing.

'Just... just a dumb dream...'

I think this pretty much nails it. It's one thing to claim fanfiction, because no one cares if your accurate or not. If it's canon, though, then you HAVE to care because its official.

That's not really 'fair' to the other players, though, if you start calling dibs on characters. Quests by nature this is a real faux pas

It introduced a new character to the "canon" who was (and might still be) married to Mami. Also, I think he rescued a few characters from Kilgore's bloodbath, but I doubt anyone cares about that.

It's minor but it still annoys people. Going off of the other fanfiction writes in SWQ and other such quests, people tend to care less as long as the fanfiction is completely separate from the main quest.

You are a Magical Girl, and you're currently in the air, en-route to Siberia. You're inside a rather spacious and very luxuriously-furnished Learjet 85. It's the company jet, not some impromptu chartered flying coffin - you figured that out from the garish logo glossily imprinted on its hull, as well as the fact that nearly half of the passenger seating has been taken out to give its fortunate occupants all the leg room they could possibly need, and more.

It's just a shame that they couldn't have used the extra space to install a wet bar in this damn thing.

You're weren't feeling all that up to exploring the luxury of a plane you'd never be able to normally afford a one-way trip in, so you've taken the very first seat you come across - the one that's nearest the passenger entrance. You'd lke to think it was coincidence that Midori took the seat directly beside you - well, across the center aisle, but she's close enough to see that you're just about to read a very interesting book, with it still shrink-wrapped and resting on your lap.

Misaka had taken the seat facing you - and you have the nagging feeling that she'd picked that seat because of the window view, which she's currently admiring. The plushie version of Tiny Pete squeezed tightly in her arms, its cartoonishly-proportioned thunder hammer flopping about in one clawed fist.

That reminds you of something. What's to become of Tiny Pete? Did Misaka just leave him in her warehouse, deactivated, with only disassembled weapons for company? Sure, for all intents and purposes, the guy is a robot - a huge, demon-killing robot at that - but that robot did save your life, and fought with a selfless bravery that you don't see much around anymore. You blink as you realize that you're actually concerned about him - and you're even using pronouns to refer to him, in fact, instead of just 'it'.

You wonder if there's truth to the saying about girls being fond of oversized killing machines with tusks jutting out of their faces and fists the size of cars.

There probably is. Funny as hell, that.

So what do we know?

>Mami asked us for forgiveness for being a total bitch when we killed her best friend.
She shouldn't be asking this. Ever. It's wrong and it frightens me.

>Mami nominated us for Warmaster, aka great power she was about get herself.
It's fairly obvious she's planning SOMETHING, and knowing us it's not good. Only a dumb or very evil person would make Murderface a warmaster. Admit it, we're known mostly for fucking shit up regardless of whether or not we're supposed to protect it.
Either that or Mami has the hots for us which is nigh impossible considering outselves and if true is probably worse than the alternative.

Actually, there's another important detail implied here.
>QB allows for voting to decide the Warmaster.

There must be a reason why he doesn't simply pick one himself, or at least GIVE THE ILLUSION that he doesn't.

>Mami instructed us to hit someone.
Maybe nothing special, but it didn't strike me as very Mami-like. At least not the Mami we should know.

>We're off to Russia leaving everything important to us, minus Misaka, behind. Which admittedly isn't much but should be mentioned.
Let's be prepared to return to some deep shit if we ever saw any.

>We have a 50% chance of finding a potential solution to the golden corruption thing.
We may be able to increase our chances if we play this right. Let's not fuck this up. We gotta be clever, and not think with our magical girly bits for once. (Not that anyone's going to listen, of course.)
This also means there's a large chance of getting into even deeper shit.

>QB has expressed his interest in having us use the Golden Weapons more often, if not solely, despite knowing what they do.
This leaves two possibilities. He either knows something we don't that may let us stay sane despite that (not very likely), or he wants us to go off the deep end like Ms. Pig Sticker and go full Faust (very likely).

>The old Warmaster is known as The Betrayer.
Enough said. Be polite, be professional, be prepared to kill her at any given time.

>Everyone reads porn of us.
I'm not yet sure what to think of this.

We may also want to give Midori a grief seed or two when we get the chance. She used a lot of her power to fool and paralyze us during the Iori Protection job AND as far as we know, she has not had the chance to cleanse her soul gem yet. While she may have been cleansed during her time as a guest of the QB corporation, we should check to make sure.

Another notable thing to remember is that the girl who witchified at the start of the quest at Mami's place used to work for Midori's former boss. We may want to ask Midori about more details about that, or if she recognized the girl who went full witch.

You pointedly ignore Midori's alarmed, desperate stare as you finally prise off the rest of the shrink-wrapped plastic covering the doujin - and at the same time, you call your arms dealer's attention. Misaka takes a moment to tear herself away from the window to look at you, a questioning expression on her face.

Making a show of flipping through the doujin's pages without looking at it - it's a thick volume, that's for sure, and you catch a whiff of that nice scent that all freshly-opened books seem to have - you ask her about her plushie's bigger cousin. After all, didn't she leave him with his repairs incomplete? The last you saw of him, he was still waiting for his other arm to be reattached.

"Ah, is okay, Murderface!" Misaka beams at you as she reaches up with both hands to slip off the goggles you'd always seen her wear. "Misaka will complete Tiny Pete's repairs in Kamchatka base! This one will just activate teleportation beacon as soon as we arrive! Easier than disassembling him and shipping him over piece by piece, ahaha!" She takes one of the plush terminator's floppy, oversized arms and waves at you with it. "Misaka is touched that you are concerned about Tiny Pete, though! Will make sure that he knows that Murderface is thinking of him!"

You nod. That makes much more sense, yes. And that's...sweet, you suppose.

You decide to talk to your arms dealer a bit more. You have hours to look at porn, seriously, and since it's getting close to Misaka's bedtime, you may as well ask the questions you desperately need answers to.

Like where she got that plushie, for instance.

"Ah, you mean Big Pete?" Misaka grins, clearly proud of the toy's clever nomenclature, and she holds it out to you with both arms. "Sayaka-san made it for Misaka! She says it is thanks for Tiny Pete helping Murderface and Kyoko-san in mansion! It is very cute, yes? Sayaka-san even got tusks and spikes right! Also, screaming demon skull with wings on right pauldron!"

Sayaka...? Well, you didn't expect this, but for some reason it also makes sense. And Misaka's right, the blue-haired bitch did get a lot of the details right, including the tusks. Not something you really see everyday, at that.

You slap the book against your arm rest a couple of times, making Midori visibly flinch with each impact as you ask yet another question. Well, two - the first being about Misaka's brother, and the other about how the bear hunting is in Siberia.

"Hm? Ah, Misaka's brother..." The young girl's expression turns thoughtful. "Misaka's brother is really smart! But Misaka is smarter than him, definitely!" It's then that she frowns. "Although, Misaka really questions his decisions, sometimes...he did something with his hair, ah, make it all ugly white instead of nice brown, like Misaka's! Now he looks like he has a mop on his head!"

Looky what I found on the twitter... just for you guys!

Artist is https://twitter.com/maiikari

That said, I think the most salient Mami question is the Golden Musket. She's had one for over two years, as far as we can tell with our meta knowledge. Two years and she hasn't gone crazy (as far as we can tell), nor has she told anyone (other then Kyubei, as it seems out of character for her to NOT tell him). However, he has not chosen to experiment on them until NOW, when multiple are spotted and we've had our first employee death.

I think yes, we ARE much more expendable then Mami, and not a single character seems to think otherwise. Even Chiaki seems like she would willingly take the hit to save Mami pain. I think we can trust Mami's reasons and explanation on why she wants us to be Warmaster; especially after (in her eyes) she horribly failed the 'Save Kirika' sidequest she sent her friend on, I believe her when she says she's setting us up because she wants us to be better.

Kyubei, not so much. He doesn't care about us; by nature magical girls are expendable in the long game that he ALWAYS is focused on (though he does seem curiously fond of Mami). He's giving us little perks to keep us loyal and doing what he wants, and this vacation and promotion are just that. As long as we willingly go and test the Gold Weapons for him, he gets what he wants and doesn't have to sacrifice more loyal and valuable employee's like Mami. Right now we're playing his game at his tempo, so yeah, we're going to get rewarded like a good little pet with money, vacation, promotions, bitches, and other job benefits. He doesn't understand humans, but he does seem to understand our urge to collect STUFF, and he's happy to play Sugar Daddy.

You're satisfied with what you've found out from your arms dealer. Sure, you could have used a bit more information about her brother, but it's not like you won't find out yourself when you get there. You let her get back to whatever she's doing, and she pouts slightly at you before glancing back out her side's window, cuddling Big Pete ever so tighter to her.

In any case, you have porn to get to. Probably some embarrassing, mind-numbing pornography, at that. So like any sane individual about to dive headfirst into the screaming tides of the Warp, you choose to ward yourself from madness - and it's by having Midori give you that packed dinner Mami made for you, stuffed in the wicker basket your personal goddess of fortune brought with her all the way from her apartment.

Your green-haired subordinate is all too willing to fetch your packed dinner - which is packaged neatly into a three-tiered cylindrical container. Her eyes are riveted towards the open book on your lap - and she makes a sound akin to a mouse getting stepped on as you push it gently aside to make room for the first tier of your packed dinner.

"Um...Matsuda-sempai, I--" She starts, clearly distressed and possibly wanting to broach the subject before you do, and you interrupt her by having her give Misaka her own packed dinner, and making sure that the arms dealer eat her vegetables. This earns you quite a good amount of ire, until you tell Misaka that she won't be getting her promised chocolate if she doesn't do as you say. She acquiesces after that, grumbling.

Midori's shoulders are drooping by the time she goes back to her seat, her own packed dinner on her lap. You ignore this as you pop open the lid of the first container - and the smell of Mami's pancakes, drowned in syrup, is the smell of victory.

You stab a fork into the first pancake just as you hold up the book in front of you with your free hand.

And you begin reading.

You decide to read the entire thing - frame by frame, speech balloon by speech balloon, page by page - with the focus you generally reserve for assignment dossiers, gun catalogs, and any written message that's directly from a certain Mami Tomoe. You're reading it hard enough that Midori is sweating bullets and trying visibly to decide whether to rip the book from your hands or to simply throw herself out of the plane, is what you're trying to get at, here. Every turn of the page preceded by stuffing a forkful of pancake into your mouth.

It's...well. It's porn, that needs to be reiterated first. But you're surprised at the fact that not only does your subordinate draw well enough to be of professional quality, but there's an actual story buried deep in the layers of lesbian pornography inundating the pages. Sure, the dialogue is a bit rough, and it gets into the tawdry porn talk consisting of repetitive moans and someone's hips moving on their own - but it doesn't get outlandish. Certainly nothing about knocking on the door of one's baby factory, or getting pregnant through the mouth. Had you seen those, you would have slapped Midori just for the principle of it.

The beginning of Miracle Midori's tale begins typically enough - a cheerful junior high school student of a middle-class family, visited one day by a magical creature telling her that she's the chosen one, and that she has to fight evil by becoming a Magical Girl. She does so, and on her very first battle, nearly gets the job done on her by a grotesquely tentacle monster that, honestly, could have been more detailed.

Except for the fact that it has rather wicked chainsaw teeth running the entire perimeter of its edge, like some sort of murder frisbee. The teeth chewing air the moment the entire thing is thrown.

You refrain from commenting at this point in time, choosing to instead let Midori simmer, soak and stew in her own despair as you continue to blithely read her doujin, scarfing down Mami's pancakes all the while. You make a mental note to thank Mami as soon as you get off the plane - her cooking these confectionary delights seem to be all the bolster you need to get through something as disturbing as reading drawn pornography of you.

Well, you're exagerrating. It's not really that disturbing. Just...really weird.

Your resumption of the consumption of pornography and pancakes lands you in the first sex scene of the book - it's of Miracle Midori and Murder Mayumi, after the battle. Apparently, Mayumi had overexerted herself during her slaughter of the tentacle monster, and Midori had taken her back to her house to try and help her recuperate. It's a typical setup, once more drawing from established conventions, and frankly a bit impossible - you don't know anyone who would be in the mood after reducing something like a many-limbed monstrosity into so much hamburger. But it seems that they're really into it, with Mayumi taking the lead, and Midori helpless against her new friend's attentions.

...You're flattered, but your proportions are nowhere near Mayumi's.

You're pretty sure you don't know how to do that thing with your tongue, either.

The scene ends in a rather comical fashion, with Midori sobbing about being ruined for marriage, clutching the covers to her chest, while Mayumi lights up a cigarette and smokes, all cool and brooding in that 'sated predator' kind of way. You immediately hate this Mayumi person, for the simple fact that even you know that kind of behavior after coitus - not that you've done it before, mind - is unacceptable. It's then that your doujin self says something that nearly makes you spit out the bit of pancake you've been chewing:

[Murder Mayumi]: I'm not going to apologize. I needed your mana, and this is the only way I can get it. Prey like you should stop crying and accept your fate. You should be honored I chose you.

[Miracle Midori]: B-but...you...

[Murder Mayumi]: If it makes you feel better, consider it as payment for my rescuing you. Reimbursement for saving your life. Surely you're familiar with that concept.

...What a bitch. Seriously.

Maybe she thought Murderface had Already read it?

For the second time, you hold your tongue - simply because you've got better things to do with it at the moment, specifically trying to emulate that thing Mayumi did with hers while giving Midori her forced jollies. How does that even work, anyway? Licking around, then in? Around, and in? There's some sorcery involved, you decide as you keep trying to emulate such tongue-twisting technique - no one should be able to do that with their own tongue, period.

You hear a choking sound coming from Midori's direction, which you plainly ignore as you unsuccessfully try and replicate the act of knotting a berry stem with your tongue. Like that's even possible.

Toe-curling tongue gymnastics aside, you continue reading the rest of the doujin. You see that like typical releases, each volume features enough pages to fully explain the setting, introduce the characters, and exactly one sex scene - i.e. the reason it's being bought in the first place. Not bad, considering that the quality is the sort you'd expect from any commercial manga, except that it's got porn in it.

The volume ends with Miracle Midori waking up to an empty bed, and she wonders if the day's events actually happened. She starts to doubt herself, until she sees an indigo rose placed on the pillow where Murder Mayumi had originally been.

[Miracle Midori] It's...she left this for me. A blue rose...her calling card. What does it mean...? Does she care about me at all? What have I gotten myself into?

The volume ends there, and the rest of the pages are advertisements about other running doujinshi, the publishing house credits, and other stuff like that. Nothing about a second volume preview.

I was more pointing out that 'doujins' isn't even a word, is it? I've always been under the impression that Japanese words don't USE an 'S' at the end to entail multiple objects; a ninja and many ninja is the same thing?

That said, yeah, it sounds like there must be multiple volumnes out already. We can stop MORE from being made, maybe, but who knows how many are already produced? Being published by official big name publishers with ads for other doujin in the back make it sound like it's big enough to have a decent size run.

True, but we also gave her a chance to break out of her previous work of being a rape facilitator, ensured that her parents are looked -after and under the QB's aegis of association, and pretty much gave her a second chance at life when we could have killed her. She was expecting that to happen and even made peace with the fact that Murderface would be very likely to make a tapestry of her entrails.

In a sense, "Mayumi" may have saved Midori from an incubator who was pulling her in a downward spiral. Although not in a gentle manner, I'll grant you.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

Widely-published lesbian pornography, at that.

Widely-published lesbian pornography featuring you and your stuttering, blushing, almost-reduced-to-tears subordinate. Your own subordinate, who you have a lot of reason to believe is the party responsible for aforementioned lesbian pornography, and coincidentally sitting just beside you. Well, somewhat beside, there's a narrow aisle between you, but she's easily within arm's reach. She's got nowhere to run, unless she considers throwing herself out of the plane is a viable escape route.

Of course, with how she's looking like right now, she might be considering it, her eyes darting back and forth from you and the open doujin on your lap.

Iori was right. It's so hard to find good help these days.

With your young and impressionable arms dealer minding her own business, picking at the healthy, crunchy vegetables in her packed dinner, you have yet to react about the material that you've read. And it was very explicit material, if very well-illustrated and nicely-written. You're no expert, but it was engaging enough for you to read it through its entirety - besides your being morbidly curious just what it was about.

"M-Matsuda-sempai, please, I-I can explain that...e-everything, please, just give me a chance," Midori's stuttering is getting worse, and she's keeping her voice low so as not to carry. "I...I know it looks a certain way, but..."

How do you react? Do you give her a chance to explain, or cut her off right then and tell her what you think?

You keep your gaze locked onto Midori's terrified own as you replace the lid on the second container of pancakes that you've only just finished polishing off, pushing the empty husk aside and popping off the lid of the third and final container. You catch a whiff of the very last stack of heaven you'll be eating until you get back to Japan - and it's after a moment of savoring the moment that you nod at Midori before replying.

"Explain."

And with that single word, you open the floodgates. Or rather, Midori does, immediately letting loose with a deluge of breathless apologies, sobbed-out explanations, and whimpering promises that you barely understand or comprehend - they're all rather running together, let loose in a babbling stream that becomes even more indecipherable and panicked when you furrow your brow in your attempt to listen a bit harder. By the way Midori's eyes are growing wider and her face getting even more pale, she probably thinks that you're getting angrier the more she tries to explain.

It's only after the fourth time that she begs you not to throw her out of the plane and instead just wait until you land before killing her that you shove a forkful of syrup-drowned pancake into her gabbing mouth - effectively stunning her and silencing her long enough for you to place an index finger to your lips. Confusion and fear clouds her face - until you cock your head towards Misaka's direction. She follows your gaze to see that the arms dealer had in fact fallen asleep in her chair - and being a good girl, she did eat her vegetables.

Well, except for her carrots. But you excuse her for that. You hate carrots.

Midori nods as she turns back at you, and you pull the fork away, letting her calm down by chewing into the morself of heaven you've just forced her into her mouth.

After a few moments, you tell her to explain herself to you again - this time, slowly, and with slightly less mortal fear.

She does so, swallowing quite audibly.

"S-Sempai." Midori finally manages, her voice barely above an awed whisper. "T-that was...that was the best pancake I've ever had." Color returns to her face, giving her a rather nice blush at the cheeks. "Is...is it always that good? Mami Tomoe-san made them, didn't she? I...I had no idea they tasted like...like..."

You click your tongue in slight annoyance, before slapping the doujin's glossy cover lightly with your fingers. She can gush all she wants about Mami's pancakes later - for now, she should focus on talking her way out of a one-way trip out of the plane's emergency exit.

Well, no, you're not going to throw her out of the plane. Maybe. If you don't feel like it.

Midori swallows audibly yet again, and nods. "A-alright, Sempai. I...uh..." She gestures towards the doujin on your lap. "Can...can I borrow your copy for a while, Matsuda-sempai? I'll give it back, I promise."

You pass it to her, and she accepts it with a murmur of thanks. She flips through the pages really quickly, as if to examine the print quality - and you see her smile wistfully as she does so, but only for a moment. She then gives back to you, a determined expression on her face.

Heeeey, i made a thread!
So, on today's edition of "oh god deculture why do you live on the moon or whatever the fuck", i'd like to ramble about tarot cards for a bit before i lose consciousness.

Uh, hear me out.

So, we've got golden weapons for Us, Kirika, and Kilgore, numbered XIII, XX, and XI respectively. In the normal major arcana, those correspond to Judgement, Justice, and Strength, respectively - each of which the character in question had been displaying a twisted, dark version of.

For more fun, all three so far are also ones in the stupid creepy thoth tarot, where they're Adjustment, Potential, and Lust, which... also suit the characters they were attached to.

In conclusion, this theory doesn't actually affect anything and I am very tired.

"I...I'm sure you've figured it out that I'm responsible for this, Matsuda-sempai." She says this with a quiet, if resigned conviction, meeting your gaze with clear eyes for the first time since you got onto the plane. "Y-yes, I am Green Green. I wrote up and drew the Adventures of Miracle Midori and Murder Mayumi. I'm not going to lie, I...I based some of the characters on people I'm familiar with, b-but what author doesn't? E-everyone does it, even the bigshot circles do it too--"

You tap your fingers against the cover again.

"A-alright, fine, Matsuda-sempai. If you have to make me say it, I..." She blushes a furious crimson, averting her eyes to the side for a moment, before looking back at you. "I based Murder Mayumi on you, and...and Miracle Midori is a blatant self-insert." Her voice starts to shake, and tears once more well up in her eyes. "There. I promised I would never admit it to anyone else as long as I lived, Matsuda-sempai, but here I am telling the one person I never thought would confront me about it. The one person I hoped who would never find out." She shakes her head, hugging herself tightly. "A-and...and I'm sorry."

You stick a forkful of pancake into your mouth before replying that you'll decide whether or not to accept her apology, as you're still waiting for her explanation. She flinches slightly as if struck, before letting out a sigh of resignation.

"...I was..." Midori says after a few painful false starts, rubbing her own arm. "...I was lonely, sempai. I mean, I always had the knack of drawing, it was the one thing I was really good at, before I took up a contract. I had a lot of practice at school, seeing as I had little to no friends then."

Luck could be the fool or Wheel of Fortune.

Happiness could be the Sun or the Star.

Victory is The Chariot.

Paranoia could be the Tower or the Devil.

She casts her eyes downward. "I...I thought I'd finally be able to get friends of my own, after being a Magical Girl - but turns out my luck's not that good. I mean...what, my last assignment had me helping out rapists, and the closest thing I had to comrades were this bunch of elitist cunts who never had a problem with money and paraded themselves around as Saints." She snorts lightly. "No one should be born with my kind of luck, sempai."

Midori clears her throat. "A-anyway, um. Yes, sempai, I did draw porn of you, and...and I'll admit that there's a bit of wish fulfillment going on, but..." She looks at the book again, and then back up at you. "I...I just made it so that I had something to keep myself occupied, Matsuda-sempai. Something to escape to after hearing about how we're about to get kicked out of our house by creditors, or my Incubator getting me another one of those jobs that don't as much crush your soul as it tears you apart."

Ah. Well. You're familiar with that. Only that instead of drawing porn, you rely on painkillers and alcohol. Which is...not exactly the same thing, but hey, whatever works, right?

"I never intended for you to find out, sempai." Midori's voice is contrite, regretful. "I know it must be horrifying and embarrassing of you to do so. I...I never meant for it to be like that, I'm not into character assassination. Not when someone I...I really respect is involved." It's then that she seems to choke, before shaking her head again. "I-in fact, I was about to call the publishing house and ask them that I was going to stop making them, seeing as...seeing as you're my boss now."

She looks up at you.

"I'm sorry, sempai. Please forgive me."

Twilight is slightly different. 50 Shades of Gray is closer, but still not it.
In a bodice ripper, typically a stablehand or the like borderline rapes a victorian lady and she likes it. Usually involves ridiculous names for genitalia, ridiculous trashy (but not necessarily bad) writing and enough cheese to make a fondue for the whole family.
I used to read them on the train, they're cheap, plentiful and usually pretty funny.

First: I'm saying she doesn't because of overwhelming industry precedent. It's safer to assume she doesn't see a cent off of the things than to speculate she makes a profit.

Second: "Obscure stuff" is relelvant because of separation of legal entities - As an example, Hiroe Rei. Writes/draws Black Lagoon, among other things, but publishes his h-manga under the alias TEX MEX, which, for publishing purposes, is a separate legal entity.

Now, granted, there are occasional singular exceptions, but, quite evidently, these are exceptions, not the rule. Which leads back to my point of it being unreasonable to assume that Midori is somehow one of these rare exceptions, and not like one of the other thousands of faceless doujin artists floating around.

You swallow the mouthful of pancakes you've been pensively chewing as you listened to Midori's half-explanation, half-apology, and most probably final last words before you toss her screaming out of the plane's airlock - and it's with inexorable slowness that you reach over with your free hand, fingers curled into a fist, right over Midori's head. She seems to get the point quickly enough, and closes her eyes tightly, her fingers curling into her chair's armrests. Bracing for an inordinate amount of pain.

You would have laughed at this, if not for the fact that Midori is quite visibly frightened of you. Another Magical Girl, gripped with enough fear of you that she has actually forgotten her training and is now sitting very still across from you. Waiting for you to do your worst. Waiting for you to hurt her.

It's understandable, of course. You did kill her former employers in cold blood. You blew her kneecaps away and had her holed up in a single room for a week or so. You have a reputation for being...well, being Murderface. Your reputation in a single word, a title, a nickname. Doesn't take much to figure out why she's scared. It's all your fault.

The problem is - did you really want it this way? Being able to trust only a few people, and be friends with even fewer? While the rest of the world thinks you're some sort of crazed psycopath a hair trigger away from going postal?

If we just flick her she'll only have one shift from scared to kinda relieved. If we do a short pet and then flick we get a wider range, we get the shift to completely relieved and trying to snuggle into the head pet and then the flick of slight relieved surprise.

So for the loyalty program:
End of each week a symbol(probably a rose) is given to whoever has worked the hardest in their own position
No sabotage
Finding and turning in a gold weapon is a sign of extra hard work for the officio on your own time, which gets an extra symbol
At the of the month (to keep it small) anyone holding a symbol may attend a dinner with Warmaster Chiaki
Unwritten rule, symbols may be traded. You only need the symbol to attend (so people can be nice to friends)

You let out a sigh, before you open your hand, and gently, carefully, give Midori a pat on the head.

You do it again, just as carefully, and it's then that the green-haired girl opens her tearful eyes, looking at you with no small amount of disbelief and surprise.

"...Sempai?" She asks, hesitantly, her voice barely above a whisper.

You immediately give your opinion of what you've read, before your common sense tells you otherwise. You tell her that the tentacle monsters could use a bit more detail. You cite the inaccuracies regarding her depiction of you as Mayumi - her proportions and the murder frisbee the two most glaring that you note (although, to be frank, you think having chainsaw teeth installed on your shield is probably something you'd want to look at). You also point out, in an offhand manner, that you think that Mayumi is a real piece of work, and you'd probably shoot first if you ever met someone like her in a dark alley someday.

You finish this off with another pat on the head, telling her that you don't mind her drawing this kind of stuff. Everyone needs a hobby, after all, and hers just happened to involve you. What were the chances of her ending up under your employ, anyway? She couldn't have known. You tell her that you don't mind her continuing what she's doing. It's not harming anyone, after all, and you're not so vain that you'd go off on someone simply because your rep is taking a hit.

By this time, Midori is nearly crying with relief, and you slowly withdraw your hand as an awkward silence comes over the entire passenger cabin, only broken by the sound of Misaka's cute snoring.

You offer your handkerchief to her, and tell her that she should eat her dinner before it gets cold.

Okay, if we're doing that we need additional ways of getting roses than just being the hardest working a week. Bonuses for truly exceptional performance in the field, saving another Magical Girl colleague's life, providing information about a Golden Weapon, and so on.

Maybe hand out more than one a week at this, not too many, have small rewards like being able to take the day off unless there is a really high priority job that needs you, a stack of Mami's pancakes, larger rewards would be things like a dinner with the Warmaster. It also means that Magical Girls who aren't idolizing us and don't want dinner with us are encouraged to aim for the rewards.

You nod at this, before going back to your own pancakes. You should finish yours before it gets cold, too. Not that they taste any less delicious even if they do.

You pull out your smartphone from the inventory and check your diary app - that strange, devilish little program that seems to be giving you some very cryptic messages, while being quite tightfisted with said messages. What kind of developer would make an app like this - seal away diary entries with a different password for each, and only at certain times?

The screen lights up, and you're given a notification: you can unlock one entry at this point in time. The dialog for the password entry pops up, asking for the usual five characters.

As you mull over what word to input, you ask the still-sniffling Midori the six hundred yen question - that being, why you? Why someone like you as her subject for something that's obviously a labor of love? Surely she could have found someone better to partner up with her self insert, right?

Midori blinks at you, before going red all over again. "I...u-um, well, Matsuda-sempai, if you must know, I..." She swallows, audibly, clearly very uncomfortable with this sort of questioning. "I...I heard about you way back then, and I needed someone...someone cool, you know? Someone dark and awesome and brooding, to pair up with my bright, optimistic, vulnerable lead." She giggles weakly. "I know, I know, it sounds like a really trashy harlequin novel, sempai, but you have to understand that I didn't think it would sell."

Midori gestures to the book on your lap. "I made fifty copies of those for Comiket, and fully expected to come home with every single one of them. I just wanted something to do. Imagine my surprise when they got snapped up so fast that everyone was asking me if I could run to the printers and have them print more as a rush job, and to come up with the sequel as soon as I can."

Huh. Well. That's a good enough reason as any, you suppose. But what was that about the wish fulfillment thing? Did she actually like being taken advantage of, like that?

Another awkward silence, and you clear your throat. Maybe you'll let that one slide, for now. You ask her instead about what's going to happen next in the story - from what you've heard, she's already published quite a few volumes already, right?

Midori nods after a moment. "Y-yeah, sempai. I'm up to the sixth volume already." It's then that she grins. "A-and I can't tell you that, Matsuda-sempai, that would be spoiling you! I can hook you up with the second volume, though, if you want to read more!"

You nod after a moment before replying. Sure, you'd want to read more. You're not really into the stuff, but you're curious as to what happens next, particularly if Murder Mayumi improves as the story goes or remains an insufferable bitch. Midori giggles at that, and nods, her mood clearly improved.

"A-alright, Matsuda-sempai! I'll make sure to get you the second volume as soon as I can! Just tell me when you've finished it so I can get you the third volume - that way, you won't get spoiled by the temptation of jumping volumes!"

That makes sense, but...you're not that impatient that you would jump over important plot and exposition just to get to certain parts. But you shrug at this, and lean back on your seat as you key in a certain name into the password input dialog.

We are now officially insufficiently paranoid. Again. Time for a strategy session with Midori; we need to have plans for working in tandem if we're about to go meet someone named THE BETRAYER who may or may not know things about us that we don't know ourselves. At the least we need to know how much use she can be in active combat, even if it's just a support role.

It'd also be sort of neat to know how good her illusion powers make her at espionage, because we seriously need to expand our repertoire of information-gathering beyond "asking people."

You finally put away your third and final container of Mami's blessings, and you give its emptiness a mournful look before replacing its lid and setting it aside. Pulling yourself off of your chair - it's comfortable, you'll give it that, but nowhere near as comfortable as your favorite - you get back on your feet and walk towards Misaka's sleeping form, careful to be quiet about it.

You put away her dinner containers, make her seat recline enough that she's comfortably lying on her back - and it's then that you drape one of the blankets supplied for passenger use over her, making sure that both the arms dealer and her plushie Terminator are well covered. You give her a small pet on the forehead, before walking back to your seat.

"Hey, Matsuda-sempai..." Midori calls out softly as you get settled. You blink at her for a moment before reclining your chair, and it's then that you ask her what she wants.

"Hypothetically speaking, sempai, if...I confessed to you right now, I..." Her words are halting, and she's obviously embarrassed about the entire thing. "What would you say...?"

Hypothetically, huh? You let out a sigh as you take off your glasses, folding them carefully and holding them against your chest with a hand. Your other brushing your hair away from your eyes, as you look up at the learjet's ceiling.

You let out a small sigh, before turning slightly to look at Midori - who seems to be looking up into the ceiling as well, curled up underneath her own blanket. You tell her that hypothetically, you would say no - simply because she doesn't know you all that well, yet. YOU don't know her that much yet. Confessing your feelings to someone isn't something you take lightly, and you have to be really sure when you do - and at the moment, you're not sure if she's anywhere near close of being sure.

She has no reply to that, it seems. You shrug inwardly at this, before telling her to go to sleep, as you have a long day ahead of you when you arrive.

It's only when you close your eyes that you smell something...familiar. Again, a perfume, so cloyingly and eerily enticing. The smell of corruption, of decay, of despair, of fear. Like blood to a shark, you automatically home in on it, and you find yourself breathing deeply.

It's then that you feel something warm and soft gently settle upon your hips. Like someone light and warm straddling you. The tickle of frills upon your waist and stockinged legs.

Your eyes immediately snap open, and you look out into a world of frozen time. Your shield manifested onto your right arm, sparking crimson, clicking furiously.

And Pinky is right on top of you, smiling, both her hands on your shoulders. Her eyes as black as midnight, her teeth pinked with fragrant blood.

"Long time no see, Homura-chan."

Any "relationship" Chiaki got into at this point would be ridiculously exploitative. She's an emotionally-crippled, paranoid, unempathetic schemer. These are all positive traits as far as survival in her situation is concerned, but if she wants to get into the whole being-with-other-people thing she needs to clean that up.

And she's working on that! She is! She's just not nearly done. By any sane measure, it'd be a terrible idea. The best thing we can do to win becoming-a-better-person points is to not inflict ourselves on someone else like that.

Personally, I think Iori is our best bet BECAUSE she's not a magical girl. She's the outsider looking in, and the one who, previously anyway, was convinced that we could be pulled out and be better then we were. She doesn't see us as a magical girl, and she's not going to let us be defined by our job description. As the outsider, she's the one best equipped to helping us be 'normal', which is something I don't think we're going to get from anyone else.

The problem, though, is avoiding dragging her in further. I'll freely admit that's a real sticking point with this plan.

If this was a problem before hand, we should have had this chat when things were still calm and we weren't giggling about her jilling herself to us.

We let it go, she got the idea we were interested, and only when things go sour THEN we step in an lay down some rules. This was neither the time nor the place for either Chiaki OR Iori to calmly a rationally discussing things.

We went straight from being quite good with the handling Sayaka and Kyoko to full retard with Iori in the space of a car ride and while the situation wasn't the same we knew we had fucked up with her after we called her.

If Mami didn't try to fix things and save everyone then she wouldn't be Mami though.
Despite everything she is still enormously naieve and honestly believes the best about people like Chiaki and Kirika.

In the latter case she had reason to since Kirika had been a very reliable friend of hers but in Chiaki's case it was purely faith that she could be better and she saw Iori as a vehicle to that.

Or she saw that Iori was a weakness and something she could use to control us through our desire to protect her from the sort of shit we get up to.

I actually think it was a small group doing most the arguing and the rest sort of got sidelined.

I didn't want us to suck up to her and everything but I wanted us to use the brains we had shown we had previously and apply them to the situation at hand so that we didn't end up where we are now with an uncertain or worse future.

The whole waifu / grimdark bullshit etc argument just took over and I am inclined to believe it is partly summer and partly just truly retarded people who wanted to just derail things given how quickly we reverted back to quite civil afterwards.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and...well, you're fucked.

Not literally, of course. Relationships and you go along together like a house on fire. With said house used to store highly-volatile chemicals and other things that explode the moment you look at them wrong. Hell, you're not even into the having-any-friends thing, because no one sane would consider someone who self-medicates too much and drinks even more as a valid acquaintance. So, no chance of you being able to get some quality time between the sheets with a willing partner.

Somehow, you're just fine with that.

No, you are well and truly fucked because the pink-haired Witch from your nightmares has somehow triggered your time-stopping ability - in order for her to manifest directly into reality. In fact, she's right on top of you, straddling your thighs, her gloved hands on your shoulders - in a rather uninvited simulacra of the Mile High Club membership process.

Midori was wrong. No one should be born with YOUR luck.

Normally, Pinky manifesting isn't a bad thing. Not as such.

The first time she did, it was in Charles' bar, with her briefly taking the place of Kyoko as you

It's just that it's happened in the very worst place it could. On a private plane, god knows how high up in the air, over an ocean you're pretty sure is filled with all manner of disgustingly dangerous, villainous and poisonous creatures.

No, you're not a beach person. Not at all.

But you digress. This is the worst place Pinky could have accosted you. In tight quarters, with virtually nowhere to escape to - and with Midori and Misaka at arm's reach of the Witch. Frozen in time and completely vulnerable. Unable to defend themselves should Pinky decide to slice their throats open. Or rip their hearts out. Whatever she felt like doing at the time, really, and you know she's more than capable of doing either.

Your shield is clicking incessantly on your right arm, glowing an alarming red, reminiscient of molten steel. It's not warm by any means, but even you know that's a bad thing.

"Now, I know what you're thinking, Homura-chan." Pinky giggles, her breath impossibly, sweetly delicious that you can taste it on your tongue. "You're thinking that it's not very nice of me to show up unannounced, like this. But really, this is your fault - spending all your time with other girls and sparing none for me. I thought...I thought we had something special."

She sits up on your lap, her hands moving down your shoulders, your front, to rest lightly upon your waist. Her touch impossibly hot and chilly at the same time, even through your clothes.

"All you had to do was give Mr. Shield there a slight push. Doesn't even take you more than two seconds to visit me. And it's not like I'm asking for anything grand." She gives you a squeeze, and you gasp as you feel claws dig slightly into your side. Not fingers, claws. Poking into your flesh, not penetrating but definitely making their presence felt. "Just a quick hello, maybe ask me how I'm doing. But no, nothing. Not for a long while."

The black-eyed Witch lets out a sigh. "Why avoid me, Homura-chan? I've been helping you a lot, after all." Pinky pouts as she starts rocking back and forth on top of you. "Did you forget how I helped you with when that...that thing had you in her barrier?"

It all went towards that...that thing with her dumb stupid robot!"

She gestures towards Misaka, this time. And for some reason, you can't help but smirk at this.

To be fair, you are handing out golden weapons which make people's heads rotate a full 360° and start vomiting while gibbering about the flesh of fallen angels. And more recently, make a certain someone turn into some sort of horrible corpse-monster and almost kill one of my teammates.

Also I thought my shield was broken. It didn't really work at all with the fight with Kirika, so I thought it was best to only use it when I really need to.

But you have some valid points, so I got you a present: a doujinshi that seems to be very popular amongst the girls in the Officio Assassinorium. Also there's some suspicious chocolate in here which may be slightly trippy. There also might be a pillowcase in there or something.

You fidget slightly underneath the black-eyed Witch - and the motion reminds you of the rather disturbingly-tight hold she has on your waist, the tips of her claws digging just a bit more into your skin. You stop moving right then and there, save for your breathing - and it's with slow and measured movements that you put your glasses back on. If you're going to die, right here and now, you'd like to be able to look at them properly, at least.

...You have to admit, she has you dead to rights, right here and now. You can't so much as push her off without putting either Midori or Misaka at risk, and you know that the Witch is all but waiting for you to give her a reason to lash out. You're just fortunate that she's focused on you rather than your colleagues - and she'd said as much that she's not feeling very friendly towards either of them.

You let the breath you've been holding out - and it's then that you decide to distract her even further. To keep her talking, keep her fixated on you until you get an opportunity to...do something. Anything. But not right now. Right now, you need to keep the world-ending abomination focused on you and you alone.

You breathe in, and it's then that you start talking. You tell her that she should be the last person in this relationship to accuse anyone of being unfaithful - after all, isn't she the one handing out golden weapons like candy? And Kilgore, even? Did she have no taste? Who else was she seeing behind your back, anyway?

"Homura-chan, I'm surprised. Surprised and ashamed that you'd think so badly of me." She shakes her head mournfully.

"Don't you realize that I'm doing this all for you? Do you know how hard it is to keep track of a thousand potential candidates, all at once, trying to see just who among them is a perfect fit for whatever I have on hand then? It's...it's..."

She scowls down at you, before suddenly smiling sweetly as she licks her teeth. Changing tack - as well as emotions - at the speed of light. "Well, to be perfectly honest, no, actually that's really easy to do. But it's really, really annoying sometimes, especially when they suddenly get into their heads that they're some sort of superhero! One of them actually tried to blast me with the weapon I gave her before flying off! And she was really pretty too, we had the same taste in hairstyle and everything!" Pinky blinks her midnight-black eyes after a moment. "W-well, she had long brown hair, though, and she kept blathering on something about making friends and everything..."

Her smile falls slightly at your mention of Kilgore. "Oh, stop saying nonsense, Homura-chan! You know I'm not into those brutish types! Besides, I didn't give HIM the eleventh - he took it from someone I gave it to! One of his girlfriends, I think, I can't remember. She was really cute, and her Soul Gem was a pretty pink color..." Her expression turns wistful as her grip on you slackens ever so slightly. "...but anyway, my policy is to hand them to Magical Girls only. It's not my fault if someone outside the industry picks them up. I just make the best of it, that's all.

At your last question, her smile widens. "Ah, wouldn't you like to know, Homura-chan? But really, I may as well give a hint if that's what you're fishing for." She removes her left hand from your waist and holds up her fingers, each one darkened with your own blood. It's with obvious gusto that she licks them clean. "I don't wish to ruin the entire surprise, but let's just say that your best friend in Siberia might be hiding something." Pinky giggles. "The Betrayer. Gosh, I can't really make it more obvious, can I? With a name like that, you have to be suspicious!" She looks down at you, frowning, before reaching down with a bloodstained finger and poking your cheek.

"You make the strangest friends, Homura-chan. Mami-chan I can understand, Sayaka-chan and Kyoko-chan most probably...and these things I SUPPOSE I can get, but..." She shakes her head. "Someone like Kharn? And not to mention that Culexus girl you hung around with that made everyone sick around her. Ugh, don't get me started on her..."

...You hung around with a Culexus? You don't remember spending six months with someone like the Betrayer, but also a Culexus? Just how much have you forgotten, anyway...?

How do you respond?

Pinky is here because she wants a reaction. Anger, affection, whatever. She's needy and wants aknowledgement. So regardless of how we respond, we need to ball it and go as extreme as possible. If we seem indifferent, then either she gets defensive and tries to get our approval, or, much more likely, does something to shock us out of apathy. If she's feeling jealous, Green will die, if she's feeling mean, Misaka dies. Risking injury at her hands and provoking her to focus on us seems the safest plan for everyone, since at most she might scar us. And right now we're feeling rather motherly towards both our little girls, so I imagine Chiaki would rather like to keep them.

Just HOW LONG have we been bouncing around trying to stop her? And how many times has it not worked for us to be still doing it 100 years later? And why are we only getting the golden weapons NOW, if this game has been going on this long?

No wonder our memories are shit, if we've been trying to save scum her into a win.

It's after your carefully-worded reply - one you banked on keeping the eldritch horror in a fetching pink dress talking as she continues to straddle you - that she blinks her unnaturally-dark eyes, as if suddenly coming to a rather surprising realization. It's then that she slowly clambers off you, and you feel the sting of her claw-tipped fingers pulling themselves away from your punctured skin. You'll probably need to get that looked at.

"You don't...you don't really remember, do you?" She murmurs after a moment, suddenly sullen. "I...I know I said that I thought you were just a copy, but that was back then. Now I'm...I'm not so sure myself. I desperately want you to be the original, Homura-chan. The one that started all this...this nonsense. This suffering."

It's then that she smiles, sadly, as she places her bloodied fingers against her chest, your blood staining the skin revealed by her costume's low-cut design. Besmirching the perfect crimson gem just below her throat. "I've already forgiven you for killing me, you know. Breaking my heart...well, I'm still working on that, but I still love you just as much as I want to kill you."

It's as you slowly sit up in your chair to look at Pinky - slowly, so that she's not alarmed by any sudden movements - that you see the darkness in her eyes slowly fade, revealing warm, amber irises. With the same warmth and joy and kindness as Mami's.

"I love you, Homura-chan. Even though you've made me this way. And nothing will ever change that."

As she looks up at you with her blood-pinked smile, however, you see that they're black once more. As if they had never changed color. The same shark-like midnight black, from the pupils to the irises. Was it just a trick of the light, or..?

"Well, that aside, I wouldn't MIND manifesting and being introduced around as your girlfriend," she leans forward, planting both her hands on your chair's armrests, she leans in close, close enough that your noses are almost touching. "But see, the only way I can do that that is for you to collect all twenty of my toys, Homura-chan! Sure, I can give them all to you, but where would be the fun in that?"

It's then that she frowns as she draws back, crossing both arms over her modest chest. "Well, no, actually giving them all to you would be fun too, but it's just that I've given all of them away already, and you know how their owners can be a bit attached to them. I know, I should've thought of it earlier!" Pinky sticks her tongue out at you playfully, winking as she knuckles her temple. "Stupid Madoka-chan!"

She giggles momentarily before letting out a sigh, and then clapping both her hands. "But still! You've already got three of them, and in such a short time! You're making very good progress, Homura-chan! Just two more, and you'll be at the top! I know someone who has like five of them, and she's pretty good with every one!"

I DO like how well this is matching Homura's drive from the show. There, she was sacrificing everything and everyone to save Madoka.

Now, that loyalty has been turned around, and Madoka is doing the same with her new found powers. Except something didn't work right, and she fell into a witch form.

Well done, Deculture!

This. IF she is that smart, powerful and completely sane, then we're so royally fucked it hardly matters. When the alternatives are she is crazy or we're totally fucked, then we don't have much choice but to continue as if we're dealing with a crazily obsessed ex girlfriend. Not that I have any experience with that whatsoever.

Five? Five of these things? Kirika nearly murdered you with just one. Kilgore in his daemon form nearly murdered you AND Kyoko with just one, and you needed the help of Tiny Pete with that. What the fuck can you do against someone wielding five of the godforsaken things at once?

"Oh, I'm sure you'll figure something out. You're Homura-chan, after all!" She leans over and gives you a small peck on the cheek, and you catch a whiff of the sugary-sweet, cloying corruption permeating her entire body like a stench. "Now, remember what I told you about the Betrayer, Homura-chan! Should you get into combat with her, you have an 99.99% of dying! Repeating, of course!"

It's then that she glances at your shield, which is positively grinding its gears, now. "And seriously, you should use Mr. Shield much more often. He's not broken, he's just special!" Pinky waves at you. "Until next time, then! And please, Homura-chan, stop hanging around that stupid Iori girl! She's an idol, not your waifu!"

With a jarringly-sharp grinding of metal gears and the snap of metal, your Shield finally springs back into its original position - the tension held back seemingly reaching such an amount that you feel your entire arm nearly get shaken out of joint at the sudden mechanical action. The world around you returns to its normal technicolor trappings, and Pinky vanishes from the plane like a bad dream.

You glance down at your sides, checking for bleeding puncture wounds, only to find absolutely none.

Well. No one ever said going crazy involved so much...crazy.

Misaka and Midori are still asleep, as if nothing had ever happened.

What do you do?

The prophecy is here:

"It's broken," Misaka murmurs. "The machine spirit of this device is broken. It is not whole. It is crying because it is not whole, and it cannot work as it should." Misaka's voice is mournful, quiet, and almost tearful - which is strange, considering she's almost always upbeat. "This unworthy one wants to fix it, but...cannot. Only Akemi Homura can."

Wait. That name. But how could--

It's then that she looks up at you, and you feel sobriety washing over you like a cold bucket of ice water.

Misaka's eyes had gone completely black.

"The Machine Spirit cries out for its missing pieces. You have two, Homura. Get the others. Right this wrong. End this world before she does."

It says the machine spirit, possibly the shield, is crying out for the missing pieces, the other golden weapons.
Kind of sounds like getting the golden weapons will allow us to fix the shield and destroy the world, which could be doing a timeloop.

Ah but given the Magia revolution storyline created fast who has all sorts of reality raping powers it opened the possibility that Faust was killed prior to proper PMMM and then she went on to her proper ending.

Remember Homura kept jumping because she failed, it never said she failed the same way or that things happened anywhere near the same.

This could be the events that lead to her getting to her proper timeline by the long way around of having to kill Faust.

There was nothing saying that Madoka could end up a godoka figure prior to PMMM.

We know her wish allows her to re-do her meeting with Madoka when it goes to shit, in addition to the regular time-stop.

What makes Homura absurdly dangerous normally is that she has god-knows how many years of combat experience. Maybe even a whole lifetime's worth of battle to figure out just how to use and abuse her powers in the most optimise way.

She can also make pipe-bombs.

Lets see, what were the timelines displayed?

1. Homura stays normal, Madoka + Mami die against Walpurgisnacht.
2. Homura contracts, Madoka becomes a witch.
3. Homura perfects her fighting techneque, however both her and Madoka end up on the verge on becoming a witches. Madoka gives Homura a grief seed and asks to be mercy killed.
4. Homura kills all the witches, however Cooby, sorry QB, makes Madoka contract with him. As a result Madoka manages to one shot Walpurgisnacht. QB talks that she will eventually become the most evil and powerful witch ever.
5. Anime timeline, Madoka becomes godoka and rewrites reality.

You check yourself for anything peculiar - your eyes, your costume, even your breath (which still smells of the pancakes you've eaten earlier) - just in case your little encounter with Pinky gave you more than rustled jimmies and wrangled nerves.

Nothing so far, then. Although...from the looks of it, your Shield's not any better. In fact, you think that last bit has stressed it out some, by the way it seems to be faintly smelling of gunpowder. You touch a finger to it, finding it cool - and it's then that you experimentally rack it, to see if it would dispense anything.

The Golden Desert Eagle, in all its gaudy glory, snaps into your hand. The handle growing comfortably warm under your touch.

...Well, at least it works.

You carefully place the Desert Eagle back in its inventory, before sending Kyuubey an SMS telling that one of the Golden Weapons is currently in your possession. You immediately get a reply of acknowledgement from him, and nothing more.

Sighing, you sink back into your chair, wishing for a bottle of Kong's to at least help you fall asleep. Dealing with everything in the last twenty-four hours, well...it's been rough.

You take off your glasses, close your eyes, and dream of a brown-haired idol serving you pancakes.

>SPECULATION

I know very little about the PMMM show aside from the slightly frenetic summaries available online, but it seems that Madoka gains godly powers and reshapes the universe to one more of her liking.

Perhaps in this iteration, she attained godlike power by becoming the witch Faust, and Homura instead gained the godlike power in a more "proper" way. Homura sees Madoka becoming the god-witch, and opposes her. Homura loses the fight, but Madoka is either too weakened from the conflict to dispose of her or too fond of Homura to go through with it. So instead, she tries to reshape the universe in her weakened state.

>> ☐ Anonymous 08/17/12(Fri)12:42 No.20359110

But a duel between two deities is extremely draining; Madoka cannot recreate the world perfectly, so she instead restarts the timeline with as modifications as she can muster. Either she didn't have enough strength to alter the presence of witches, or she realized that she could not do so, otherwise the timeline would snap right back to its default position and erase her from existence (no witches = no godlike Faustdoka to remake the timeline). She may have also attempted to recreate Homura by injecting her into some sort of reincarnation cycle, but lost track of her. She cannot distinguish which Homura is a result of the reboot (or reboots) and which Homura is the "original" one. Hence, the "copies" of Homura are the ones resulting from the Faustdoka reboot, while the "original" Homura is the one that rose up to oppose Faustdoka.

Faustdoka needs more power, and she can't get any by draining people or by being worshiped. So she takes a page out of QB's playbook, and sends out the golden weapons into the world to create no small amount of grief-stricken magical girls, and collects the resultant energy into the Planet-sized Grief Seed that Faust has. She may be doing this to fully recreate/reincarnate the Homura she knew, or she is attempting to gain enough power to create a more "perfect" timeline.

Not necessarily, actually! After Homura resets and is seen chasing Kyuubey through the empty hallway, it plays out differently than Homura and Madoka's meeting there in Episode 1 (she walks away, Sayaka doesn't show up and blast her with the fire extinguisher). So the implication was always there that Homura's been through more timelines than seen in the anime, corroborating with both comments by Kyuubey and Homura herself that she's been through this "countless times."

You should watch the manga, it's quite good.
That said, Madoka becomes stronger after every timeloop Homura performs because of accumulated karma or something. Prior to the final timeloop she isn't strong enough or doesn't think to wish that magical girls don't become witches and eventually either dies or becomes a witch herself forcing Homura to timeloop again.
What is likely is that Madoka became a witch in a previous timeline and fucked up Homura who was left dead in a witch's barrier in this timeline.

You wake up some time later to Midori politely and carefully shaking you by the shoulder - and you blearily open your eyes to see her in pretty much the same state, her long green hair somewhat mussed. "Good morning, Matsuda-sempai." She murmurs quietly, her voice somewhat hoarse. "Er...sorry. Not a morning person, really. But we landed around half an hour ago. I told the pilot to let you sleep in for a while, it looked like you needed it."

You manage to say thanks without slurring it too much, your tongue feeling uncooperative, your mouth dry. You rub your eyes for a moment before putting your glasses back on. You glance towards Misaka's seat - and you find it empty, devoid of arms dealer and Big Pete. You ask Midori where she is.

"Outside on the tarmac with the pilot. She's trying to call the base and see if they can't fetch us from here - apparently, it's hidden somewhere in the mountains near us, so none of the locals can get us there." Midori shrugs as she herself seems to get herself ready, re-tying her sneakers before standing up.

Ah. Well. That's fine, you suppose. The both of you should probably join Misaka on the tarmac with the waiting.

"Yeah, probably should." It's then that Midori smiles and raises the bag o' porn you bought from the airport's Toranoana branch. "Got your host gift right here, Sempai. O-oh, and I put the first volume back in your inventory, if you don't mind my doing so."

...No, you don't mind. Not this time. But you tell her to keep her hands out of other people's inventories next time.

"R-right. Sorry, Matsuda-sempai." All contriteness, Midori bows, and you grunt in response before finally pulling yourself up back onto your feet and making your way to the passenger exit doors, carefully picking your way down the small staircase.

What greets you is...well, Siberia. The airport is a small one, although certainly one with a story to tell - seeing as the adjacent landing strip has no less than five MiG-21s parked on top of it, in formation, frost slowly forming on their snow camo-painted hulls. There is snow everywhere, a pure white landscape underneath a gray-slate sky with absolutely no sun at all.

Oh, and the cold. It's VERY cold in Siberia, apparently, but the chill isn't that uncomfortable. You hear Midori utter a shaky curse from behind you, however.

"Jesus. It's like a fucking...freezer! And I thought our winters were cold...!"

Ahead of you, Misaka is comfortably swaddled in a thick padded jacket, worn over her lab coat and school uniform. She seems to be a bit cold still, but she's hugging Big Pete against her which seems to provide some sort of relief.

On her head is one of those black furry hats with the red star on them. Ushankas, if you remember correctly.

She is looking up at the sky with a forlorn frown on her face, as if waiting for something.

It's then that someone clears their throat beside you - and you turn to glance at the source, coming face to face with the pilot Mami told you to punch.

I can't second that enough. When we meet Khan we have to play our cards carefully in order to find out a) what she's hiding, and b) this 'sarcophagus' (assuming they aren't one the same). Whilst doing this though we have to carefully make sure she doesn't try to, well, betray us. By which I mean kill us.

He's...not an exactly bad-looking guy. Nondescript, sure, with black hair slicked back, skinny frame in a nice-fitting black suit, aviator shades hiding his eyes. In his hands are three items - one thick, slightly-oversized briefcase and two thick jackets, the first one a horrible shade of pink, the other a nice black color.

"Compliments of the Incubator," He says flatly, holding out the jackets to you. You toss Midori the pink one as you put on the other. "And Miss Chiaki's weapons, of course." The pilot offers you the suitcase, which you also take. It's a bit heavy, and you look at it with confusion - before realizing that Kyuubey had just given you Kirika's sword and Kilgore's gauntlets.

Lovely. This you pass to Midori, with the murmured order that she is not to open the suitcase under any circumstances. She nods immediately, taking the grip carefully.

It's then that you hear Misaka shout something in Russian - and you turn to feel the gale of a chopper touching down. Granted, there IS one just about to touch down, in front of Misaka - and it's one of those Chinooks, the weird-looking helicopters used mainly to ferry tanks and other vehicles.

Kyuubey's smirking face painted garishly on its hull, and vandalized with horns and a goatee.

"And that would be your ride." The pilot says after a moment, turning back to you. "I'll be staying in the nearby city, to wait there until further instructions. Will that be all, Miss Chiaki?"

I wish I shared your optimism.

Although you're right, we shouldn't forget that as far as anyone else is concerned we're just here to learn and carry out an experiment. Both of which I think could be much more important than anything else here.

You shake your head after a moment's consideration.

"No, that's not all." You say over the roar of the nearby chinook's double rotors. "I have something for you, from Mami Tomoe."

The young pilot seems to blink from behind his shades, and you take that moment's confusion to turn towards Midori, pushing her towards Misaka.

You tell your subordinate to get herself and your arms dealer into the chinook. You'll be following shortly, you assure her.

Midori looks at you uncertainly, before nodding. "Alright, sempai." And it's with snow crunching underneath her sneakers that she makes her way towards Misaka, the arms dealer turning at Midori's approach. You seem them talk for a while, and it's then that they make their way towards the chopper.

You turn back to the pilot, who still seems to be confused, but apparently waiting for something to happen.

You follow Mami's order to the letter. That is, you punch him hard in his gut, putting your entire weight into the blow. Driving your clenched fist into his midsection, a strike that he all but crumples around, seemingly in slow motion, before sinking down to his knees in the snow.

"W-what--" He chokes out, his shades askew. Looking up at you with surprised, enraged eyes. "What the hell was that for--"

"Sorry." You apologize, sounding completely the opposite. "Mami told me to punch you out."

You glance at the MiGs at the adjacent landing strip, and then at the Chinook, before making your way towards the former. You stop for a moment, however, to look back at the now-kneeling pilot.

"Do something to upset her again and I will actually hurt you."

With that, you leave him alone as you run towards the parked warplanes, a small smile on your face.

Now, what was your favorite number, again?

You get to the chinook around ten minutes later, where you find Misaka having fallen asleep again, this time pillowing her head on Midori's lap, Big Pete still clutched in her arms. Midori meanwhile is already strapped into her seat, and you do the same, albeit with a small smile on your face.

"Ah, sempai." Midori smiles at you. "What took you so long? The pilots were teasing Misaka that a bear had taken you prisoner. You should've seen her swear at them in russian." She blinks as you say nothing. "Wait...sempai, are you smiling? What happened back there?"

You tell her it's nothing, although you make a mental note to ask Misaka how to say 'thank you' in Russian.

It's with a waspish whirr that the embarkation ramp of the chinook raises up, and the entire vehicle lurches as its rotors start to chew into the frosty air, wrenching itself airborne.

Towards the base. Towards the Betrayer.

Since it seems to be traditional for these to go after the chikuwa, here is my humble attempt at writefagging - http://pastebin.com/Mj0MTCNt

-If anyone saw the deleted tweet about it, i'd like to explain. At first, i was just replying to comments because, you know, that's how internet works, but when i re-read my reply, i realized that it was trying to explain how people should feel about some words i wrote, which is basically the fastest way to act like a douche.

So: As the writefag, i don't know who Chiaki names at the end. I decided it wasn't my place to say.

As someone reading it, i hope that she would have been a good enough person to have said "Just be yourself", but i rather doubt it would happen.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and you're about to meet someone you've completely forgotten about. It's not as though you wanted to forget about them, of course - it's just that you've got a memory that's just as reliable as a sieve holding water. What's alarming, really, is that apparently you've spent six months of your two years of service with this person - and you've apparently have no idea what happened during those six months. You've lost a quarter of your life as you remember it, and it begs the question - just how much have you forgotten?

This disturbing revelation - and many others - is somewhat waylaid to the side for a bit, as your arms dealer had woken up in your subordinate's arms. She had sleepily made her way to you, the plushie equivalent of a nine-feet tall walking avatar of destruction being dragged across the metal grating floor of the chinook - and unceremoniously clambered onto your lap to sleep there. You see said subordinate laugh at this, and take a picture of the scene with her cellphone, quickly enough that you had no time to clear the expression of surprise on your face.

You haven't moved a single inch from your seat since then, afraid that you'd wake up the poor thing snoring on your lap. It's understandable that she's still sleepy - you did spend the majority of last night awake and waiting for your flight.

Oh, and you've just stolen an entire wing of MiG-21s off the airfield where your plane landed a few hours ago. There's that. You feel oddly good about that one, as if it's something you've been doing for a long time, and just recently taken it up again. Familiar, comfortable, even nostalgic. Like a hobby you abandoned and are just now rekindling your interest.

An old love.

"I love you, Homura-chan." She had murmured, eyes full of warmth and love. "Even though you've made me this way. And nothing will ever change that."

...Well, you suppose you can hardly blame yourself for forgetting, if you've screwed up enough that you unwittingly created an insane god out of the breakup.

You have no business to be in a relationship. That much is clear. If you're lucky, you will die cold and alone, angry and bitter, without someone to hold your hand just as you bleed out into the gutter.

You gently nudge Misaka awake as you one-handedly undo the straps holding you secure to your seat. For some reason, this doesn't work, and Midori, your subordinate, helpfully takes your arms dealer from you as you finish divesting yourself of your protective harness. A moment more - with Misaka stirring, mumbling your name - and you finally free yourself, carrying the half-asleep arms dealer in the same way you'd carry a child. You tell Midori to bring your things, namely the bag of porn you've bought for your host and the godforsaken golden crap that Kyuubey's foisted onto you.

A rather ominous-looking silhouette, famed by the white snow that you're starting to despise, awaits you at the bottom of the Chinook's embarkation ramp. Long hair, a tall, slender frame and what looks to be...spindly, armored legs, the feet hooked and bladed.

You find yourself suddenly freezing in your tracks. It's not the cold that does it, nor the sight of the silhouette. You've seen much more disturbing things. Kilgore would have made anyone soil their pants upon seeing him, especially when he suddenly turned into a monster. All you did was make a few wisecracks with Kyoko before cheesing it.

No, this was different. You've only felt this a handful of times, in varying degrees. Kilgore had it, but his was tainted with his own fear, and a mindlessness that blunted it rather than focused it directly on to you. Kirika had this in spades, but your anger then made you all but ignore it, your incandescent hate forming a bulwark against its otherwise paralyzing effects.

At this point in time, you do not have that luxury, and you feel the full effect of it wash over you like a tidal wave. One of blood, murder, and despair.

Whoever the Betrayer was, she had the killing intent that promised a massacre.

"Sempai?" You hear Midori's voice beside you, tinged with concern. "Is anything wrong? Did you forget anything back in the plane?"

You blink at this, before shaking your head no. No, you didn't forget anything.

Unconsciously, you hold Misaka to you just a bit more tightly as you force yourself to continue walking. One foot in front of the other, taking care not to slip on the already frost-covered steel grating.

Is this how the people you've killed felt the moment they saw you coming? You've been told you have something similar - at least, the ones you remember training or sparring with. How they felt you coming even before you've stepped into the same section of the training field as them, even before they realized that you were hunting them. They would tell you that they felt unable to move, unable to breathe, unable to hide. As if their bodies had shut down, resigned to simply waiting for the end rather than fight back or retreat. As if they instinctly knew that doing either would make things a whole lot worse for them.

You make it to the bottom of the ramp, and you see for the first time the person you've forgotten. Long black hair, down to her waist. Slender, tall. Skin so pale it's almost translucent. A smile curling soft, unpainted lips.

And eyes the color of midnight, with the pupils stark crimson dots.

Her voice, when she speaks, is as cold and as smooth as a freshly-oiled gun barrel.

How do you respond?

HINT OF THE DAY:

There's private collectors around the world, with private hangars with planes and other jets like F-86's and the English Electric Lightning, and MiG-29's.

A MiG-21 for sale is around $200,000, a MiG-29 is like, close to a million, an SU-27 is at least 2 million and goes up to 15.

So knowing all this, a MiG-31 is around the price of a MiG-29 or more. If Chiaki can steal a mig-31 or two (second is spare parts for cannibalizing). She can basically have enough money to retire early or have a beach property in the Bahamas or something.

So I checked how much real estate is in the Bahamas. 500k USD is the lowest range. 1 million is somewhere in the middle. So an entire wing of Mig-31's means Chiaki now has a nice beach property .

And an entire wing of planes, is about 2-4 squadrons, of 12 planes each.

Do the math. Chiaki is suddenly filthy rich if she can sell all the planes (to Balkan/African/South American nations).

I read a doujin where Homura beat Walpurgis Night because she had shoved Sayaka into her shield after she became a magical girl in every timeline, and now had like a hundred of them to unleash upon it.

Then Madoka asked what she was supposed to do with all the leftover Sayakas, and Homura despaired because she realized she didn't think that far ahead and would have to deal with them when they invariably became witches.

>Andrei Valnikov is a Los Angeles based cop who has served over 20 years on the force, most of them in homicide. Ever since his partner committed suicide in despair over the barbarities seen on the job, Valnikov has had a hard time coping with his feelings.

>Valnikov's new partner turns out to be a woman — Natalie Zimmerman. She's a no-nonsense cop who is not happy about working with a man who drinks too much and is troubled by nightmares.

As you force yourself to take a few more steps towards her, it's then that you see your former partner just a bit more clearly. She's...eerily beautiful, like an elegantly-forged weapon or firearm made with the express purpose to kill.

Amusingly enough, it's not her hands that catch your attention. Not her legs, either, - which seem to end at the knees, and where two spindly, blackly-armored appendages begin, plates of brutally-edged ebony steel layered together. And no, it's not her rather strange, way of dress - an office lady's blouse, bisected by the crimson tongue of an expertly-knotted tie between her ample breasts, with a soft brown cardigan half-worn up to her elbows and secured there with thin black straps. Her bottom consisting of form-hugging black leather shorts, ending just at mid-thigh.

No, all these things, strange as they are, fail to catch your attention.

You stare at her for a moment, before returning her greeting. Mmumbling something about how your memory has been unreliable as of late.

She laughs at this, softly, and it's one of the sweetest sounds you'd ever hear, enough to send a chill up your spine.

"Yes, I have been informed of this. You do not remember things as well as you'd like. That is no issue, we have enough time - and enough vodka - to reminisce."

It's then that she steps forward to meet you, crossing the distance between you and her with a few confident strides - and each step, you hear the steel of her legs clanking together, as if to provide evidence of their mechanical nature and at the same time show themselves off in action. Moving much more fluidly and gracefully than metallic prostethic legs had any right to be.

She comes to a stop in front of you. She's a good head taller than you, basically, forcing you to look up. Beside you, Midori takes an involuntary step backward. You will yourself not to do the same.

"I have also heard that you have been chosen to take up the mantle of Warmaster, Murderface. This pleases me. Allow me to be the first to call you by that rank, since I will be the one to help you train for it." She smiles, and just as suddenly goes down on one knee. Her head bowed low.

"I, Valnikov Kharn, The Betrayer, recognizes the Warmaster and submits herself to her authority."

You blink at this, and hastily ask her to rise. You're...still in training, you remind her. People kneeling to you...that's as weird as it gets, and you're not so sure you're comfortable with the prospect.

"Forgive me, Murderface. It has been a while since I have been in contact with the rest of our kind. I miss the rituals, the rites of respect." She shrugs her slender shoulders. "The city as well. You nod. Takoyaki. Yes, you...faintly remember someone who had an insatiable appetite for the things. Drowned in sauce so hot you felt as though your mouth was melting from the molten magma you've just spooned into it. You remember sharing them with...this person, in front of you, who looks lke murder given form than anthing else. Justice given form.

In your arms, Misaka fidgets again, mumbling your name.

Kharn notices this, and blinks, before smiling, shaking her head. "Ah, where are my manners? We should be doing this inside, and you can let the Director's little sister continue her slumber in the quarters prepared for you. We will have much time to talk about old times later."

She glances at Midori, blinking her strange eyes once at your subordinate. "I see you have taken a subordinate! You are taking this role very seriously, then. I approve." Again the smile, and you feel quite...guilty that you've forgotten all about this person, who seems decent enough so far. "Introductions can be made later, I think. Come, it is time for us to get back into the warmth of the base."

She turns smartly on her heel - her black hair swaying slightly at the movement - and it's then that she makes her way towards the imposing steel and concrete structure behind her, looking like the entrance to a bunker than anything else.

You take a moment to look around - and you faintly hear what sounds like heavy rumbling footsteps, akin to Tiny Pete's, shaking the very ground underneath you. The entrance to the base quite heavily guarded - with winter-camouflaged soldiers making patrols, high-caliber rifles gripped in their hands. Cameras mounted high on walls, turning after every few seconds, taking stock of everything that moves.

This isn't so much as a research and development base as it is a military installation.

"We...should probably get going, sempai," Midori murmurs beside you, and you nod. "I think it's a bad idea to keep her waiting."

It feels like you're walking into a prison.

"Apologies for the security," Kharn says as you catch up to her, the soldiers performing patrols giving her - and you - a wide berth, all of them standing to attention and saluting as you pass. "There are many who desire to take our secrets from us, and Kyuubey does not want that."

A heavy steel door slides open as the three of you approach, and you step into what looks like a heavy duty elevator, large enough to wheel an entire tank in and probably a whole platoon with it. Kharn unpins her ID from her chest and slides it into a slot just near where the floor buttons are - and there's a beep as she presses one of them. The doors slide close, locking with a rather jarring slam, and you feel the elevator start to descend.

You're not too sure how you feel about that.

The elevator ride ends, and the doors open to somewhere that's...well, that's a bit more homey than you thought a research and development laboratory would look like. You were expecting white, sterile floors and walls smelling of antiseptic, with all sorts of unimaginably expensive materiel and equipment all over the place.

You find the same thing here, although it looks as though a mechanic - rather than an actual scientist - had made it their home. Posters of what looks like western movies and musicians adorn every wall, along with the occassional schematic haphazardly taped here and there. The equipment doesn't look like they've seen much use - which maybe because they look damaged beyond repair, or simply pushed aside to make room for what looks like the biggest cluster of servers you've ever seen, wires snaking everywhere. A sign taped across it reads 'MAGNUS', in hastily-written block script. Looking a bit more into the facility, you see that the room extends to other rooms, where you see a kitchen, a den, and what looks to be other amenities besides the lab itself.

Oddly enough, you smell the familiar scent of instant noodles, here. Along with the telltale sting of cigarette smoke.

"Urgh. Forgive the mess, we are usually a bit more organized than this." You hear Kharn speak in something that resembles embarrassment as she leans down to pick up what looks like an empty beer can. It is crushed, disturbingly easily, in between her clawed hands. It's then that you hear Kharn shout something in Russian, and a young male voice, tired and sleepy, replies back.

"Idiot! Your younger sister is here, along with guests! Get dressed!" Kharn snaps, clearly annoyed. "Forgiveness, Murderface. We are more lax than usual. We do not receive guests really often."

You shake your head mutely. You don't mind. Compared to your apartment, this place is as pristine and flawless as Mami's. You feel Misaka sleepily nibble at your shoulder, while Midori tries to make herself as inobstrusive as possible - apparently somewhat cowed by Kharn's shouting.

"Wait, Misaka?" You hear the masculine voice call again, surprise coloring his words - and a young man comes from one of the rooms, his footsteps hurried. He is a rather interesting sight, with unruly white hair in horrible need of trimming. It's long enough to touch his shoulders and cover his bloodshot brown eyes. He is wearing what looks to be a striped shirt and black pants underneath a hastily-worn white lab coat - and his ID, pinned to the coat's chest, reads 'Souji'. "Misaka's here...?"

"Yes, idiot," Kharn snaps again, before throwing the crumpled can at him, where it plinks against his forehead. It bounces neatly into a nearby bin. "Agh, I am sick of telling you to clean up just in case we have visitors! You never listen!"

"Alright, alright, I get it." The young man says, scowling at you. It seems that he's taking some offense at you carrying his little sister like some sort of child - which she is, except for the times when she is sniping with a rifle twice as long as she is tall, and when she's putting back together a spiky black automaton capable of tearing demons apart. "So, you're that new Warmaster chick the mutant cat sent over to be checked, huh?" He narrows his eyes at you, and you feel yourself doing the same. "Huh. Can't say I'm impressed, much."

You narrow your eyes at him in your trademark withering glare - which, to his credit, he doesn't seem to back down from, although you see him swallow slightly as he returns it. Careful to keep your grip on Misaka with one arm, you reach out towards Midori with your other - and she passes you the bag of pornography that you bought for him at the airport.

You shove this against his chest, at the same time remarking that you're not particularly impressed with his basement-dwelling pedigree, either. He backpedals a bit at this, blinking, and it's then that he furrows his brow as he opens the bag, looking at its contents. Reddening at the sight of them.

"The hell...? You...you bought me porn? And chocolate bars?"

You respond - just as you hear Kharn stifling her laughter - that the chocolate bars are for Misaka, and if he wants any, he'll have to ask her about them. The rest he's free to enjoy on his own.

He seems speechless about the entire thing, and Kharn is the one to break the silence. "Ah, how the past can haunt us. Enjoy your guest's thoughtfullness when you did not have any of your own, Souji. I will show them around and have them settled. And please, be sure to lock your door."

"E-er...yeah. Thanks, Kharn." He manages to say, before shooting you a rather venomous look. "I'm not going to forget this."

Then it has been well worth the trip, you reply, before allowing Kharn to lead you further into the laboratory, Midori following close behind - and stifling giggles of her own. Once the three of you seem to be out of earshot, it's then that your host turns slightly to glance at you. "Thank you for that, Murderface. Souji can be a bit...difficult to deal with. It is nice to have him put in his place once in a while."

How do you respond?

"Being nice? Hmm. I suppose you did not kick his kneecap in or shoot him in the foot like you are used to dealing with annoying people, so there may be credence to that," Kharn says, amusement thick in her voice. "You have changed indeed, Murderface, and it seems for the better. This pleases me." She grows quiet for a moment, before continuing. "Ah, if I am to be very honest, it saddens me as well, but only a tiny bit. It is somewhat depressing to note that the Murderface I have grown to love is to be replaced with someone who cares about bothersome things like collateral damage and casualty counts."

You can't help but smile a little at this. Sure, the past you sounds terrible, but it's...kind of heartening to realize that someone at least liked you for who you were, then, and is lamenting the fact that you're changing with the times.

"But change is not bad. Change is good. The opposite of it is stasis, and if we do not change, then we are no different than our dead." Kharn smiles at you, just as she leads you to a corridor with four doors along one side of it. "Here is where our seperate quarters are. The one at the very end is mine and Souji's, while the other three have been prepared for you. Feel free to take whichever one you wish, although I think Misaka would appreciate being the closest to her idiot of an older brother."

"We get a room of our own?" Midori says beside you, both disappointment and excitement somewhat clashing in her voice. "That's...nice, isn't it, sempai?"

Yes. Quite. But...

Wasn't manipulating Kyouko into going kamikaze, was manipulating her into fighting an unwinnable battle so Meduka would become Meguca. Get your shit straight.

We do know this version of the Soul Gem has a killswitch, because QB said we could use it on Green Green if she stepped out of line.

You look to Kharn, the disappointment in your features speaking more than the words themselves as you ask as to wither she and Souji are 'Shacking up'. She had, earlier, offered drinks and reminiscence, and you were thinking a drink, or fifty, was the exact thing you needed tonight. Tossing in some of your missing past wouldn't hurt, either.

But if she's with him... You simply say there must be more to the man than you've seen, or experienced this far, to net a woman of Kharn's caliber. Either that, or is it truly that lonely in Siberia?

You blink at this. Her and Souji, in the same room, together? Bad first impressions aside, you're somewhat impressed by the implications this presents. If a basement-dwelling nerd who used to consider the 2D world as an adequate replacement for the depressing 3D one could snag someone like Kharn, then...there's probably hope for you as well, right?

You ask your host about this little matter as you make to deposit the sleeping Misaka into the room closest to Souji's - Midori rushing forward to open the door for you, seemingly playing up the subordinate role pretty well. The rooms are decidedly adequate - they're no penthouse suites, but they're certainly not prison cell quality, either. Enough room for a nice bed, a closet, your own bathroom and other amenities. You carefully lower Misaka onto the bed, taking off her shoes, jacket and hat - pulling the covers over her so she's warm.

She pulls Big Pete closer to her, still asleep.

"Ah, about that." Kharn seems to color just the slightest bit, a pink tinge spreading on her cheeks. "He is the Director of this base, and I am his assistant. There are occurences when we work for very long periods of time, even when we are in need of rest." She nods after a moment. "So, ah, we decided to share quarters, so that if we are tired, we can continue working immediately after we wake up, and that we are in easy reach of each other. It is also convenient when we are finished with field testing and other practical matters, so we can discuss and compare notes while resting."

You're not sure, and this is practicaly the first time you've met her, but you could swear that Kharn is a bit uncomfortable about this line of questioning.

How do you proceed?

You stare at her for a few more moments, and she calmly returns it with her own sunless, crimson-pinned eyes - and it's then that you nod, accepting her explanation. She seems to be somewhat wrong-footed at this, and you detect a hint of relief in her smile and at her words. "I know it has some...unfortunate implications, of course, but our relationship is strictly platonic and professional." It's then that she huffs, slightly. "Besides, he is an idiot. I half-wish that he took more after his sister, so nice and considerate. Instead, I have to deal with a buffoon with the consideration of a tactical nuke in a hostage situation." She frowns. "But, ah, enough about that. Let us leave Misaka to sleep so we can get on with today's itinerary."

You nod at this, and you follow her out of the room. Midori making sure to tuck Misaka in before leaving, giving your arms dealer one last ruffling of her hair before she herself closes the door behind her.

You take note of this, and plan to thank Midori later for her commendable handling of Misaka.

"Alright. Now, for today, we have few planned activities. Mostly it is to begin around much later in afternoon, so you can rest and prepare before it." Kharn takes what looks to be a smartphone from her pocket and delicately scrolls through the screens with a clawed finger. "

Misaka was very adamant to have bear hunting for the first day, and I am not about to disappoint her. So we will have that, and then dinner and drinks after, where hopefully we have enough bear meat for everyone." She grins, revealing perfect white teeth. "Tomorrow morning we will begin your training, and in the night, we will conduct your treatment for the GOlden Weapons."

She nods towards the suitcase Midori is still carrying. "That is two of them, yes? Kirika's sword, and one other?"

You nod. "Excellent. I will place it in our vault for now. And do not worry - only the director and I have access to it. You will also be provided access, of course, being Warmaster." She holds out a hand for the suitcase, and you nod at Midori. Your subordinate obeys, although gingerly. You don't blame her - those fingers of Kharn's look dangerous. The taller girl nods in thanks, her skeletal claws curling around the handle.

"I go to place this in our vault, then. In the meantime, please feel free to look around. The kitchen is just across from us if you are hungry, and there is beer and vodka inside. I will be back with your Identification Cards. You can also just rest in your rooms - I will wake you up personally when it is time for us to hunt."

"It is good to see you again, comrade. We will have much to talk about."

And just like that, she leaves, her strange legs making clanking sounds with every confident step.

"...Nice friend you have there, sempai." Midori says, sounding quite...sulky.

Yes. Very nice.

This all doesn't feel right...

After the whole Killgore thing, I'm uncomfortable being any place surrounded by armed guards who aren't strictly loyal to us. Chances are it's just paranoia, but the better we know the place, the safer we'll feel. Especially since we have at the very least -3- golden weapons here, plus any Kharn is packing. With our luck shit will go down, and we need to know the facility well enough to navigate in a firefight.

Plus I imagine that Chiaki's first reaction upon seeing a new place would be how to attack/defend it, since she's as twitchy as us.

We're not going to be all that sleepy, having rested on the plane here. Might be worth having a look around, glance around the kitchen and all that. Just make sure we don't go too far afield, as I expect we will run into trouble if we start moving around the place before we've got our keycard.

This might also be a good chance to learn a bit more about Midori's combat abilities. We don't know if her skills involve any kind of item that could potentially be golden, or if anyone from her old organization had any similarly corrupt weapon.

FIVE MONTHS, TWENTY DAYS AGO.

You had taken Kharn up on her offer of drinks after a particularly annoying assignment, and now, well into your third bottle of Rodnik (rather decent vodka if you were pressed to give an opinion on the matter) and second glass of Kong, you asked for Kharn's Soul Gem, saying you thought she should know about a new 'trick' you learned about them. Without question or hesitation, the woman handed it over, and was now looking quite expectantly at you.

Pushing your misgivings aside, you brought the midnight colored orb to your lips and… licked.

The reaction was immediate, and very, very loud. The resulting orgasm knocked Kharn off of her chair to where she was now writhing on the floor, making small, sharp sounds every time she gasped for breath. Raising an eyebrow, you announced your intention to lick the black right out of her eyes. And should she have any objections, she should voice them now.

The table exploded.

Without any lapse between your statement and now, Kharn had gone through the table as if it were insubstantial, grabbed the back of your chair with one hand and the collar of your shirt with the other, and forced you backwards to the ground, she riding you down with a mad grin on her lips.

The impact, of course, had knocked the woman's Soul Gem from your fingers. Panicked, with splinters of the table, broken glass, and drops of vodka seeming to fall in slow motion, you watch in horror as the midnight orb falls towards your open mouth.

Faster than thought, faster than even your slowed perceptions could track, Kharn had snatched her Soul Gem from mid air and returned it to an inert ring. "I…" she said slowly, grabbing your collar with both hands now and using her powerful legs to force you out of the chair to skid along the floor on your back, "… am going to * you." She finished in a low growl.

Perhaps, you managed to stutter, you h-h-had g-g-gone a b-bit too f-f-far with your sh-sh-shenanigans. It was just, a , well… thing between Magical Girls. You had not meant it to get out of hand.

Her eyes widened with every word you said, until those nightmare orbs showed you the true form of madness that lurked in her soul. "No escape." She says quietly, one hand dropping to your bosom. "No prayers." Her other hand continues lower, lower, stopping only at the thin fabric threshold of your castle foyer. "Iustus…" she whispered, lips moving toward your own, "…passionem."

Time stops. Her lips on yours, her tongue in your mouth. Her flanking cavalry tearing up the grassy knoll as her footmen press against your castle walls. You try to push her off of you, but Kharn holds the advantage – in leverage, in weight, and in strength.

And your hips raise involuntarily as her forces breach your castle doors, and enter the foyer, advancing, invading, and looting, before withdrawing. She breaks the kiss, pulling back to watch your face as you cry out. You can feel the tears welling in your eyes as the forcible pleasuring continues, unabated, despite your complaints and cries for her to stop.

“Stop? Stop? After that? Really, Murderface, you need warn before do that kind of thing…” Kharn says to you in a harsh whisper. “I will not let you off... until you GET off… as hard as you got me. And I aim to do the old fashioned way.”

You manage to pry an eye open, the arm tossed over your head and your hair in disarray causing Kharn to smirk at you as you ask what the old fashioned way is.

She smiles wider. “Simple. I will rape you, Murderface.”

You swallow, hard.

“I will rape you… until you like it.”

It Began.

SEVERAL DAYS LATER

The Incubator looked at Kharn with what seemed to be a mild air of annoyance. Not that anyone could properly tell, the creatures lacking any true emotions. “Kharn. Your… anitics have cost me an operative.”

“What do you mean?” She asked, as the fuzzy white abomination began to pace across his desk.

“Murderface has just awoken. And she seems to be missing most of her memories of the past few months. Preliminary examinations show she can still be used, but not at her current level. I’ll need to drop her back down to milk runs, let her get her feet back under her, before I can throw Vindicare assignments at her again.”

“I see.”

“I’m also sending you to our facility in Kamchatka, Siberia.” The Incubator states.

“May I ask why?”

He comes to rest facing Kharn, tail swishing in an almost agitated manner. “If you need to ask, then you’ll never know.”

“I see.”

“Damn sex crazy mon-kieghs.”

If you think that's all thats left for her then I think you underestimate what Deculture is planning.

I see her as being rather important to the plot in one way or the other due to her rare position of being near Chiaki but not being a magical girl.

She is a candidate for both golden toys and a contract with an incubator (pinky said she handed them all out but not to whom or when, possibly Iori took a contract then pinky came to visit) and she has very severe mental trauma due to the actions so far and it will come out one way or another.

Most cases, yeah. Homura didn't get a weapon, but a shield. Neither did Mami, she only got ribbons. She taught herself the rifles. Every other girl had both an ability and a weapon. Originally, Kyouko could create illusions of herself, but she lost that power and taught herself to create barriers instead.

Did Oriko have weapons? I don't recall if she did.

At any rate, Midori's case might be one of those things that just haven't been explored yet, or she could be a case like Mami and Homura where she didn't get a weapon.

>> ☐ Anonymous 08/18/12(Sat)18:09 No.20376695

So, about the Midori and Iori situation:

Iori will find out about Midori hanging out with Chiaki. She may even find out about Midori's last assignment before she was assigned to our care. It may be safe to assume that Iori will know about Midori's former line of work through information brokers or jealous witch-gods looking to axe the competition.

It is a distinct possibility that Midori was part of the whole Yayoi incident. If this is true, then it would either take some sort of saintliness unheard of in even the brightest of settings OR crazy unhealthy devotion to Chiaki to get the two of them to not kill each other on sight (or actively plan the others' downfall). Getting them on speaking terms could very well be impossible.

I suppose we could have Midori use some of that illusion trickery to obscure herself, but that's just a delaying tactic at best (and probably not too healthy for Midori's soul gem).

The thing is that Mami and Homura both still got something. Homura her shield, and Mama her unlimited ribbons. It would be interesting to see what artifact Midori has, and if it has any decent combat potential.

I doubt Midori would try to kill Iori, unless Iori tries to take "her" Matsuda-sempai away. That said, we really need the exact specifics of what happened at the protect Iori mission, such as whether slept with Iori or if that was another illusion. And we need to find out if Midori was on the Yayoi mission as well as any other dubious missions.

Best case scenario: Iori doesn't recognize Midori because of the illusions during the mission. Even then we should still explain what Midori did as just sitting on the information will inevitably bite us in the ass later.

Midori probably wouldn't try to harm Iori. It was just business after all, and she probably is too afraid/respectful of Chiaki to do such a thing. But Iori, on the other hand, seems likely to take up hating Midori and thinking of ways to dispose of her as a full-time job. Even if she weren't hung up on Chiaki, it would be an admittedly reasonable response to everything.

At some point, we really need to call Kyubey and get an answer as to just why Kharn is called the Betrayer... As well as what our past history with her is.

Also, does anyone get the feeling that the Golden Weapons prevent a Soulgem's Corruption -- by transferring that corruption to Pinky? It's probably not TOO much of a boost, given Pinky's witch seed is already the size of a goddam moon... but it does sort of make sense as a mechanism.

Another possibility, is that all that Corruption is "stored" away and will be unleashed and returned when the 20 weapons are united. And then boom, instant Homulily? Maybe, anyway.

>>20377696
Matsuda needed to use witch seeds to clear her corruption after the mansion incident and QB stated for that mission he would supply all the seeds needed to clear corruption from the golden weapons. So weapons increase corruption if anything.

I think Kyubey said that, judging from past records and observation of Kirika, that she should have Witched out LONG ago, but that after she got her Golden Weapon, she stabilized.

Furthermore, I think we had (comparatively) very little actual Corruption to clean whenever we've used a Golden Weapon. Or at least that's the impression I got; like, 90% full Soulgem or something.

We just used a Grief Seed anyway because we didn't trust that shit.

... And unfortunately, it looks like GriefSeeds aren't about numbers or capacity, merely use. That is, using a Grief Seed on a 90% full Soulgem, depletes the Grief Seed just the same as if it had been a 20% full Soulgem.

... Or maybe Golden Weapons have a "hidden" Corruption amount/rating, one that doesn't show up in the brightness/darkness of the Soulgem, and using Grief Seeds cleans up that mysterious/hidden amount of Corruption.

So maybe using Grief Seeds makes our "black eyes, creepyness, berserkness" go away faster than it would have normally.

I dunno... We should really ask Kyubey about all this, though.

>> ☐ Anonymous 08/18/12(Sat)19:46 No.20377920

>>20377835
Well I think the point of researching the weapons and having Matsuda train with them was to find out the exact effects.

Did Matsuda tell QB about the PInky visits? If so we need to tell him that there's apparently a person with 5. Unless that person is Kharn of course.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 08/22/12(Wed)08:06 No.20423553

You are a Magical Girl. There are times - a lot of times - when you wish that you weren't one.

This is not one of those times. Funnily enough, you can actually say that to your own reflection in the mirror right this moment and not laugh at the blatant, bare-faced lie you've just told yourself. You're still the same booze-swilling, painkiller-addicted ne'er-do-well with a fancy costume and an itchy trigger finger - but you feel that somehow things are turning around. Somewhat.

You probably shouldn't say that, however. You might jinx yourself.

As far as you can tell, it's morning in Siberia. You've arrived earlier by plane, then by chinook. Somewhere along the way you've committed your very first act of larceny in this particular country - or at least, as far as you can remember - and somehow, you felt really good when you did that. Did you commit such heinous crimes for a hobby back then, or was it just the thrill of the moment, doing something so incredibly risky and yet basically being assured that you'd get away scot free while doing so?

One or the either, no one is going to suspect a whisky-reeking cunt in a Magical Girl costume like you of stealing an entire wing's worth of MiG-21's. Where would you have hidden them, under your skirt?

In any case. You're inside the rather heavily-guarded - you swore you could see some bipedal shapes as tall as an entire building, half-hidden by the snow, stomping around the perimeter - and heavily-fortified base that Kyuubey calls the Research and Development facility of the Officio Assassinorum. You're at the floor where apparently, your former partner and fellow Magical Girl Kharn pals around with the facility's own Director, which is coincidentally your arms dealer's ne'er-do-well of an older brother. You just gave him porn after calling him a basement dweller, which is technically and historically correct - and from the way he stared at you, he doesn't really have that nice of a first impression of the Officio's upcoming Warmaster. He'd said so himself, anyway.

Heh. Warmaster.

And you know you'll never be able to deserve it no matter what you do.

Kharn is away at the moment, gone to stuff some dangerous cargo into the base's vault or something or other. The director - his name's, well, you've already forgotten it - is somewhere around here, with the porn you gave him. Misaka is sleeping in her quarters. You're left alone for the moment along with Midori.

You're free to look around. You have a bit of time to kill until the Glorious Bear Hunting Party is assembled for some Glorious Bear Hunting. Alcohol may be heavily involved.

Where do you go?

[]Look for Souji. Try to get started off the right foot, or at least make it clear that you're not as bad as him.

It's been a while since you last tried to finish off your liver, and admittedly your throat is rather dry and your hands have been a bit twitchy - but you decide to forgo the drink for now while you and your subordinate case the kitchen of this part of the R&D branch.

It's a small one and clearly meant for two (there's a dining table set for a pair at the far end of it) but it's well-stocked enough that you're sure a small group could sufficiently last for a while if a siege situation ever came up. Hell, there's even instant noodles, the kind you hurriedly sucked down just so the alcohol you'd be drowning yourself with later doesn't knock you out as fast.

You ask Midori - who's been quietly hanging behind you the entire time, seemingly miffed about something - if she can make takoyaki, and if she could, is it doable with the stuff you've found here?

She stares at you for a moment, before she lets out a tiny sigh, and then shrugs.

"...Figure I could, Sempai. She's got a takoyaki maker stashed behind the blender there, poor thing looks like it hasn't been used for a long time. There's cabbage in the crisper, pancake flour over there near the spice rack, and while I didn't see any octopus in their fridge I think squid can do in a pinch."

Good. You tell her to get to making some for Kharn, then. Not a whole lot, just a small batch to be nice. And, you privately think, to test whether or not your subordinate actually has any cooking skills.

"I'll make them for you, sempai." Midori suddenly says. "But not for her. I don't know her, and I damn well sure ain't cooking for someone I don't know."

You raise an eyebrow at this.

How do you react?

Midori just stares at you, before blinking slowly and then shaking her head. A rather wistful smile on her face as she does so. "Heh...right, right. Of course. Sorry, sempai, for a moment there I forgot who I was talking to. Should've known that I was beaten before the battle already began, and all that." She sighs, before walking past you - and you feel that the air between you has slightly changed, from her nervous cordiality to a slight chilly one. "I'll make you your takoyaki, sempai. Feel free to share them with whoever you want, I don't care." She huffs, slightly. "Not too sure why I felt like I should, either."

There's a creak of rusty hinges and pans being slightly rustled around as your personal Callidus starts the process of making takoyaki. Well, they're squid balls, now, but besides that bit in the middle they should be the same.

You're not too sure what's up with Midori, but at least she's starting on it. If she works quickly enough, it'd be a nice surprise for Kharn when she gets back from wherever she was at the moment. For some reason, you feel awfully glad about that particular prospect. You may have been an awful person and forgotten all about her, but at least you're making it up to her little by little, right?

A series of sharp, quick thudding sounds alerts you in the direction of your subordinate - and you see Midori work disturbingly expertly with a cleaver, shredding a quarter head of cabbage into nothing but coleslaw. She's got a determined look set on her face, for some reason.

Maybe people who cook are generally like that? You're not exactly sure. But Mami never looked that way when you saw her cooking for you, however. She'd be humming some sort of tune or melody, bouncing from foot to foot, smiling as she made magic with her hands.

Real magic. Not the sort from a soul gem. Actual magic, with the ingredients you can easily find in any grocery store. True magic that warmed bodies just as much as it warmed hearts.

Man. You haven't been a day away, and you miss her already.

Another sharp, loud thud - loud enough to make you slightly start - and you turn to see Midori open the can of squid with the cleaver. Lopping the top off, and pouring out the brine into the sink.

You remember that you have something to talk to her about - and you've already broached her drawing porn of you, already. No one needs another refresher about that.

What do you ask?

You try to ignore this strange mood that's somehow come over what should be a relatively pleasant experience of cooking something for your host - well, having YOUR subordinate cook something for your host - and you bring up the subject about Witches in an almost casual way, sticking an unlit cigarette between your lips in the process.

You like to smoke, sure, and you go through more than two packs a day or so, but even you know that it's bad form to smoke inside a kitchen, while food is being made.

Only dung-shoveling yokels do that. Dung-shoveling yokels who get dragged outside and shot.

"What about Witches, Sempai?" Midori asks after a moment, not missing a beat as she murders more cabbage. Thud-thud-thud-thud, like an expert chef on one of those shows where one of the judges grins maniacally at the camera as if the judge was about to rape the camera's children, before taking a bite out of an airborne bell pepper that comes out of fucking nowhere.

"I've fought some before, and yes, before you ask, my Incubator - or rather, ex-Incubator - made it perfectly clear that it's what we turn into if we don't take care of ourselves. So no, you don't need to break it to me..." Another thud as she plants the smile of the cleaver into the wooden chopping block, before pushing past you to get the other ingredients ready. Flour, eggs, some sort of soy sauce. The takoyaki maker being quickly washed and the plate brushed with oil. "...like I'm some sort of novice."

Well, that's good. That means less work for you, then.

You segue rather neatly into the incident where you found one of them in Mami's apartment, without any sort of preamble or warning. You're sure you never stepped into a barrier, either, while you approached it. Dodging the fact that you were the one to execute her - and you take a moment to prevent yourself from bragging, as it WAS a picture-perfect shot to begin with - you give her a physical description that she should be able to form a strong mental picture with. She stops in the middle of mixing the batter as she blinks towards you.

"That's...that sounds like Asuka Yuuri, Sempai. One of the girls that joined up with the Saints a while back. She never really gelled with the other members, and I heard she disappeared a few months ago." She shakes her head. "...It's...we thought she went rogue or something, joined up wih another agency, but witching out..."

Midori audibly swallows, and continues to mix the batter, albeit a bit slowly this time. "M-man. I guess it can really happen to anyone, huh...?"

You idly check your own Soul Gem as the conversation turns into what people in your industry refers to as forced retirement - i.e. that part of the story where the heroine ends up as the villain, that life lesson where if you don't look out, you become the thing you hate (and are paid to exterminate). Endearingly termed 'witching out' - it's something Magical Girls are loathe to bring up or discuss, even in private. You're not too sure you should be bringing it up either, but you have and you are.

...Nope, you're still safe. A bit of black roiling inside it, but nothing major. You quietly ask for Midori to show you her gem, and she acquiesces, a tiny bit of her nervousness around you returning as the bauble manifests into reality - and she's clean, too. You nod at this, and she returns it into its inert form, as a ring around her left ring finger.

You begin to speak after she starts to make the actual takoyaki, now, pouring spoonfuls of batter into batches of shredded cabbage placed on each dimple on the maker, turning every half-formed savory treat every so often with a pair of long chopsticks. Adding more batter as they form into their trademark spherical shapes.

You tell her that should ever the time come that she witches out, you'll make sure she passes with dignity - and as little pain as you can afford. You can only hope that she does the same for you, too, should that ever come to pass.

She looks at you in mid-takoyaki-flip, eyes wide, cheeks faintly crimsoning. And it's then that she turns back to her creations, which are starting to smell like actual food.

"A-as if you had to ask, sempai. Of course I will. Or rather, I'll try my best." Midori gives you a wan smile. "I'm not too sure if I can do something like that, myself, but I won't let you die alone, Matsuda-sempai."

You nod at this, the mood clearing up somewhat. That's good.

It's then that you ask her another question.

Did she really sleep with Iori? It's what you saw during her illusion, after all. Add to that, did she help in Yayoi getting raped, too?

You see the question jar Midori physically, making her flinch hard enough that she nearly drops the cooking chopsticks in her hands - and when she turns to look at you, you know that you've done something wrong. Even you can't miss something like that.

She turns back towards the takoyaki maker, silently, and continues to flip the now-roasting spheres of dough, cabbage and squid. Her movements quicker, but more robotic. You frown at this, and you make to ask the question again - and it's then that you get nine takoyaki, placed neatly in a bowl and drizzled rather professionally with hot sauce, thrust into your hands by the rims.

"I...I only helped. I never did anything with your precious idol, Matsuda-sempai." Midori's voice is brittle and cold, like the snow outside. "The worst I ever got was to cuddle with her in my underwear. I made you see that so you wouldn't get any ideas about getting close while I made her sleep. Coincidentally, she was the one who thought that scenario up, so your pure idol isn't as pure as you think."

There's a metal snap as she switches the takoyaki maker off, and she washes her hands again. "There. You have your takoyaki, sempai, and your answers. May I be excused, now?"

She doesn't wait for your reply as she pushes past you. "Good. I'll be in my room if you need me, and I'm sure you won't, not with Black Eyes Titty Monster eager to reconnect with you, sempai." She storms off in a huff, leaving you with a bowl of freshly-made takoyaki in your hands.

We then explain that as our subordinate, if we're going to be interacting with our principal at all we need to know the full situation. And as a friend, we wanted to know what had happened. She may not like the question, but she almost enabled some pretty despicable things, so she can shut up and deal with it.

Now, even we can tell she is distressed, so unless she has anything else to add, that is the last we will speak of the whole incident.

You place the bowl of takoyaki down on the kitchen countertop, and you spear one of the doughy savory treats with a fork - a small puff of steam escaping from the piping-hot ball of cabbage and squid. You pop it into your mouth before it disintegrates on the fork's prongs, and you wince slightly as the overt spiciness - and the temperature - of the takoyaki stings your tongue. You chew after a few moments, and swallow carefully.

It's...it's certainly not Mami's cooking. But it's decent. Certainly better than the ones you've had from stands and stalls and such. Actually, if you didn't judge everything by the benchmark that is Mami's cooking, you'd say it was good.

There's a clank of metal as Kharn steps into the kitchen, a puzzled expression on her face.

"Murderface, did something happen? Your subordinate nearly crashed into me earlier while I was on my way back. She apologized, but it was clear her heart was not into it. And--" It's then that she stops, and sniffs the air. "What is that divine smell--ah!" Her red-pinned midnight eyes swivel towards the bowl of takoyaki in front of you, and she takes in the rest of the kitchen - including the now-cooling takoyaki maker. "You...you made takoyaki for me, Murderface? After I have so selfishly insinuated that you should?"

A beautiful blush comes over your former partner's pale cheeks, and she steps closer, almost reverently. "I...I can smell their perfection, even when I am still so far away..."

You manage a small smile and nudge the bowl towards her. It's a bit surprising, really, to see someone like Kharn so excited over something as trivial as takoyaki.

Like you tend to be with Mami's pancakes.

What do you do?

Some speculation about the whole bit about "copies" of Homura and all that junk.

Pinky already mentioned that she thought that Chiaki was one of the copies, but was now unsure by some of the actions we did. Could it be possible that there are other not-Homuras running around in the world?

Fabiola mentioned that the Head Maid at Lovelace's place looked almost exactly like Chiaki when she dressed up as a maid. There was also some mention of suspicious business going on with her when we last visited the Lovelace mansion. Kharn also seems to share many visual similarities with Chiaki (and a reverence bordering on obsession for certain types of foods), although that could be attributed to Murderface taking after her mentor/trainer.

I wonder if it's possible that there are many incarnations of Homura running around in the universe, taking on different aspects of Homura's personality. Or if they are a result of Faust's attempts to recreate her with an incomplete understanding of Homura's psyche.

"...Delicious. This is...this is just like how I imagined them to be, back at Mitakihara! Ah!" You hear Kharn exult softly as she rests one brutally-clawed hand against her cheek, sunless eyes closed as she savors the taste. It's then that you stop and do a double-take as you see the beginnings of tears welling up at the corner of her eyes.

Wow. You know Midori was good, but not THAT good.

You pat Kharn on the back and leave her to it, mentioning off-handedly that it was your subordinate, Hanegawa Midori, who made those savory treats she was now enjoying with gusto. A sniff and a gulp, and Kharn reopens her eyes, nodding as she spears another one with her fork.

"I-is that so? T-then I suppose you have not changed, much, Murderface," Kharn laughs, sounding more like a giggle than anything. "You have always been horrible with the culinary arts. Only you could set cereal on fire while putting milk into the bowl."

You're...that's not good news at all. You tell her to enjoy her snack while you make certain that your subordinate doesn't do anything foolish.

"Alright. good luck, but, ah, if she is distressed, just wait until later, when we are hunting bears." Kharn grins at you. "The surest way to mend a friendship is to kill large things together."

That makes...an astoundingly high amount of sense, so you say that you'll remember that, as you leave the kitchen and make your way back to the quarters.

You come to a stop in front of Midori's quarters. The door is locked, of course, and you could hear her crying inside, slightly muffled. That's...well. At least she's still there, and you can talk to her. She doesn't have a way to escape or block you out.

You take off your glasses for a moment to pinch the bridge of your nose. Is this how it's going to be, really? Is this what a Warmaster deals with? Because you'll tell Kyuubey right now that he can fuck off with the rank, whatever it entails. You're not cut out for this, and you have no ambition of pretending to be. You are not Mami Tomoe.

Still, Midori's...well, your very first subordinate, and people did seem impressed that you were handling someone rather competently for the first time. Maybe the situation can be rectified, at least.

Deculture, is this entire plot building up to a lame JoJo's Bizarre Adventure reference/pun?

The similarities between the Golden Weapons and the Major Arcana have been pointed out before. The Fool being generally representative of the protagonist at 0 is presumably Chiaki herself.

It's been heavily implied that the golden weapons are parts necessary for the repair of our magical, timestoppy shield.

Continuing the numbering, that would make said magic, timestoppy shield...

Seems to be a good gist of it. We absolutely needed to know, but we are not gooding at speak and very bad at social interaction. Did not want to offend. That's probably going to be a large part of the Matsuda/Murderface experience.

Also, make sure she knows Iori is an idol. Not our waifu in any sense.

Probably far too late at this point, but what the hey.

Frankly, you’re apt to say whatever’s on your mind at the time. You’ve never been certain what is, or is not, acceptable to say. You simply know that, sometimes you have questions you need answers to, and you’ll chase them down until you’re satisfied with what you get. And in doing so, you’ve left plenty of trodden emotions and wounded senses of pride in your wake, you’re sure of it.

Probably broken plenty of hearts along the way, too.

However, the fact remains – Irori is simply a principle, and trying to be her friend, let alone anything else, would only place her into further danger. Kharn, supposedly, is an old acquaintance, one whom your spotty memory has let slip from your mind.

And as for Midori… You view her as a subordinate, as a co-worker, and you wouldn’t mind having another friend ‘in the business’ as it were. You did try to warn her about expecting anything resembling tact or grace from us. Our culinary skills – well, last time we attempted to make anything, it set the whole kitchen on fire.

You mention the Takoyaki was very good, by the by, and Black Eyes Titty Monster Sempai will probably thank you in person later. Also, bear killing is totally an option at some point….

You bang at her door a few more times, asking her to open the door. You threaten that you'll kick it down if she doesn't - although, to be fair, you probably wouldn't. Not that you can't do it physically, you've kicked a few doors down in your time - just that this is your former partner's place of residence, and you're not one to flagrantly overstep your privileges as a guest by engaging in some wanton property damage.

You let out a sigh and sit down on the floor, leaning with your back against the doorway. Wishing that you could smoke right now - or drink right now, at that. But no, you need to be sober for what you're about to say.

You gather your thoughts for a few moments. Seriously, you've had it up to here with this sort of bullshit, but if you have to do it, you may as well do it right the first time, so it doesn't happen again.

You talk to Midori from beyond her doorway. You tell her to listen and listen good, because you are not going to repeat yourself.

You begin to talk about how you needed to know about how she worked her mission with Iori. Sure you could have asked in a much more delicate manner, but has she forgotten who you are? Is there anything delicate about you? You're not direct and blunt because you want to be an asshole - you just wanted answers to very important questions.

Questions that involve your job, you explain. Which, she should already know by now, is something that you take seriously. Very, very seriously. If she was hurt by that, well, you'll apologize for being tactless. But you are not going to apologize for doing your job.

Another thing you'll apologize for, however, is asking her to make takoyaki for Kharn. You just wanted to do something nice for someone who obviously has been a big part of your life - and someone who you apparently simply forgot about. You also mention how Kharn enjoyed her food, and how she'd like more. Just a bit hotter with the sauce, next time. And yes, the Black Eyed Titty Monster will be thanking her personally.

You wait for a response. There is none, and you let out a sigh as you pull yourself up from your seat.

You tell Midori that you hope that this won't be an issue towards the both of you working together efficiently. She asked you to trust her, after all - the same courtesy should be offered. You may mess up in similar manners, but it's not like you're eating babies or something. In any case, she should probably get some sleep. You'll wake her up when it's time to kill some bears.

You make to leave when you hear Midori's door unlocking, and slowly pulling open.

"That's the second time you've made me cry in eight hours, Matsuda-sempai," Midori murmurs, her eyes red and swollen from the crying. "But...g-geh, I'm the one who should be apologizing. I..." She sniffs as she glances back at the inside of her room, then back to you.

"I ran off to cool down, a-and when I stepped inside, I just realized how...how much of an idiot I was, back there. Storming out on you like some sorta..." she shakes her head.

"I should've known you were just trying to do your job like everyone expects you to, Sempai. It's what I'd ask if I was in your place." Midori lets out a sigh. "Y-yeah, you could have worded it different, but it's important. It was about something important. Lives-at-stake important. I should've known better than to act like that." She hangs her head down. "I'm sorry, sempai. I...I guess I'm still not used to the full Murderface experience in person." She manages to work up a sad, tired smile. A smile nonetheless. "I mean, when you hear about it from someone else, it's cool and all, but when it's happening to you..."

"...it is as pleasant as being in a house on fire." Kharn finishes as she comes from around the corner, bowl of rapidly-decreasing takoyaki in one flesh-metal hand, the other holding her fork like a surgical instrument. "Midori, Murderface here is...how we say...impaired in certain social aspects. Do not begrudge her of such an impairment. She does not mean to be abrasive, it is just who she is, and we should not force her to change for our benefit. Rather, we should allow her to change for herself." She pops another takoyaki into her mouth, quick as a snake, chewing and swallowing in three seconds flat. "My compliments, again. You are a master."

"When you are in Siberia, many miles away from home, you stop saying the word 'just' as a descriptor of objects you enjoyed. Trust me, these are magnificent." Kharn gives Midori a warm, full smile. "You must teach me how to make them, at the soonest possible time."

Your subordinate blinks at this, blushing, and turns to you desperately for advice. Or was it permission?

Either way, you nod at this...surprising, but otherwise not that unpleasant turn of events. At the very least, it didn't turn out like the fiasco you left back home, which you're not exactly looking forward to trying to resolve.

"Ah, very well then!" Kharn exults and suddenly pulls Midori out of her room, one skeletal-fingered hand around your subordinate's wrist. "Come, you must teach me everything! Murderface, I will borrow her for a while, yes? Also, go and take a nap of your own, you look like you are someone who died and forgot to lay down!"

...Really, maybe you should. You tell her that you'll consider it, just as she pulls Midori to the kitchen, probably to trade recipes or something.

You are much too sober for this shit.

You step into the room that Midori had just been forcefully vacated from, kicking off your shoes and throwing off your sweater - and it's then that you let yourself fall face first into the soft, quilted mattress. Closing your eyes as you do so.

...It smells like Midori, which is not all that bad. You could smell a hint of...peppermint in her scent, somehow.

For once, you dream of someone else as you drift off to sleep.

And enough feelings for now, we need to get back to action.

Touchdown.

The flight to SIberia was... uneventful. My thoughts occupied me most of the time, and the auto-pilot took care of most of the flying.

My phone beeps. I check it, awaiting the orders of QB.

“Fly them back when they are done. I will tell you when. Until then, wait on them. Coats are in the back. As is the new Warmaster’s belongings. You are free to do whatever you like.”

It was as he said. A paid holiday. In Siberia. An easy enough job, anyway. Perhaps I really should look into bear hunting. It being an area specialty and all.

I pick up the coats, the Warmaster’s belongings and head out to the cold.

I smirk as I exit the plane. A job well-done. I’m dressed properly and the new Warmaster, apparently, is unhurt. Or in need of a toilet. Someone must have packed them dinner. Or they bought them at the airport. Though they need not have worried. Private jets usually cater their own food and it usually is a lot better than normal airline food. Then again, I’m used to eating MREs.

I stroll up to my charges and hand them their items. And make the necessary small talk. So far, so good.

I hear the whine of a helicopter. Their ride, I presume. I wish them well and inform them of my lodgings. And if there was anything else at hand. The helicopter was loud, but I thought I heard something.

I’m struck with confusion. Why would the Warmaster want to give me something. This throws me off my guard long enough to-

Ow. Something drives into my gut with a force I did not expect. I’m stunned, angry and mildly relieved I decided to have breakfast in town.

Was it my flying? The plane not to her liking? Or was it something else? The Warmaster did say it was from some-

Oh. I guess I did deserve it then.

I hope she gets the letter.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and you have always hated dreaming.

It's not because you have a history of horrifically-violent nightmares that involve your heart getting ripped out by a smiling, giggling, pink-haired goddess gone insane. It's not because the fevered dreams you manage to get once in a blue moon do not even have the decency to fool you, even in your sleep, that you are more than your pitiful existence - putting you in such idyllic, storybook-like scenarios that it's near impossible to suspend any amount of disbelief. It has always been either of the two extremes - joyful, shiny-coated paradise or a screaming, ignoble death.

No, the fact that you hate dreaming is that you never really could tell which is prophecy, which is fiction, and which is that last shot of vodka that you probably shouldn't have downed. Add to that, sometimes you wake up unable to tell when the dream has ended and the reality had begun - one of the reasons Mami had long started the habit of locking her bedroom door when you were sleeping over.

This time, however, seems to be different.

You are standing in front of a screaming Kharn, her eyes fully red. Not black, red. Blazing. A massive black chainblade in her hands, two meters long, the name MALAL engraved upon its length in jagged knife scratches. You dimly remember being responsible for that - her first command to you as your Warmaster. You see her snarl your name, the name she'd given you, with all the hate she can muster. And she can muster a lot.

Souji is screaming curses at you, off the side. Cradling a limp, lifeless doll in his hands. Half his face and most of his lab coat coated a sticky crimson. You blink your eyes, and they focus on the ragged bundle in his grasp - and you see Misaka's lifeless head loll brokenly with every shaking sob her brother makes.

Her throat torn open, revealing bone, leaking blood. Farther from them, the smoking wreck of a giant that had once protected you lies broken in the snow. Even further, a clump of flesh trailing vibrant green strands leads to what remains of a subordinate - one who remained loyal until you tore her apart.

It tastes of the flesh of fallen angels.

Another snarl, and the monomolecular chain-teeth of Malal starts to chew air. It is curiously silent, despite the fact that you've heard it before, and it is as loud as a jet engine. It is then that Kharn launches herself at you, seemingly in slow motion, as if gliding in molasses.

You have one moment to react.

Time has not been kind to the Betrayer. Yes, she has the same terrifying fury that paralyzed everyone unfortunate enough to bring it upon themselves. Yes, she still could wield something that should not, by any means, be considered a weapon and more of an industrial tool that weighs one imperial ton. And yes, she is still fast, faster than the eye can see, faster than justice dealt with a trigger pull.

But she is weak. She has grown soft, her sharpness dulled by being so far removed from active duty for far too long. Hesitation and mercy - the two things you have never seen in her eyes - is joined by fear. Were you not smiling already, this would have made your lips curl in amusement. In pity.

In thanks.

You close your eyes and open your arms, letting the golden katana fall from your grasp.

Your first thought is that being torn apart by a chainblade nearly twice as tall as you doesn't really hurt all that much.

You open your eyes and find yourself unable to move, or feel anything below your chest. One would have trouble doing so, after all, with most of their torso currently serving as the gory sheathe to a monster of a chainsaw weapon, its teeth inert.

You lift up your quivering arms and reach towards your murderer. Tears streaking down her unnaturally beautiful eyes, exquisite in their strange coloration. Her mouth twisted in anguish as she feels your feeble touch stain her cheeks with Misaka's blood.

You manage to thank her with what little breath you have left in your lungs, and she closes her eyes and nods.

"I will take your skull," Kharn whispers. "I think I have earned it."

You smile at this. She always had the strangest hobbies.

You fall forward on your nerveless knees as she tears the massive chainweapon out of your torso. A flick of her wrist, and the beast of a sword roars into life, its killing edge wrought with many chewing teeth.

The last thing you see before you wake up is the ground rushing up to meet you.

You open your eyes to an unfamiliar room - one that you recognize as one of the rooms that Kharn had granted you and your little party for the duration of your stay. You remember this with painful, annoying slowness, slower than you'd like. You shake your head and try to lift your head up off of the very comfortable pillow under your head - and it's then that you notice that you've apparently pulled the blankets up over your chest in your sleep, something you don't really remember doing. You also don't remember folding your jacket into a neat little pile on the bedside table, along with your shoes and glasses.

You also don't remember getting into bed with your subordinate, who is sleeping the sleep of the damnably blessed, on her side and turned away from you. Her long green hair, unbound, spilling over her own pillow.

It's not everyday you find yourself guilty of fraternizing with your subordinates, so you try to recount what just happened. You still remember your name, that's a good sign, and you think you know what happened for the best part of the last twenty-four hours.

A quick, surreptitious check under the blankets confirms that Midori is still dressed. Well, she's taken her sneakers and socks off, but you're not sure if there's anyone who wears them to bed, anyway.

It's then that someone knocks at the door leading to this room. Your room, which Midori seemed to have seen fit to infiltrate. Not that she did anything that would qualify as overstepping her boundaries, but...

"Hey. Wakeup call, Matsudaface or whatever." An irritated voice, Souji's, snaps from behind the door - followed by a series of equally irritated-sounding knocking. "Hey, are you still alive in there?"

What do you do?

You glance towards the door, before shaking your head and reaching for your glasses. Beside you, Midori seems to stir at Souji's racket, but she seems to settle back into her fitful sleep seconds later. Some people can sleep through anything, you think, as you rub the grit from your eyes before putting your glasses back on. The world coming back in sharp, clear focus.

Another series of knocks, this time a bit more forceful, and it's then that you finally snap, replying rather sharply, and a bit more roughly than you'd like. Technically, you ARE alive, it's just that your contract's condensed your soul into a teardrop-shaped gem the size of a small egg. Because, you know, Magic. And Incubators have some sort of fetish involving jewels that apparently contain souls.

Did you really have to jump down his throat for it, though? After all, you did tear out his little sister's own throat with your teeth.

You blink at this, before shaking your head. No, that's...that was just a dream. Alcohol withdrawal symptoms, you tell yourself, remembering a lecture from Mami long ago. Horrible nightmares are one of them, and a sure sign that you need to get some amber restorative in you soon.
Souji seems to take a moment to reply, as if taken aback, before snorting. "Whatever. You're due for the only hobby the yokels here have that doesn't involve drinking gallons of vodka. I'm supposed to get the two of you up top. Kharn and Misaka are already there, along with that weird robot of hers." He lets out the sigh of the massively-bereaved. "So yeah, I'd appreciate it if you get your magical ass in gear, I got research to do."

If I recall correctly, this happens to be Midori's room that we passed out in. We diplomacied her into opening the door and forgiving us, and then Kharn took her for Takoyaki cooking lessons. We just walked on in and passed out on her bed. As such, Chiaki should thank her for letting us stay over, and keeping us warm.

Agreed. Her little jealous hissy-fit of yesterday aside, Midori has done a good job. She even carried Chiaki to her room, tucked her into bed, and climbed into the bed with us....without removing our clothes or hers.

Midori just did pretty okay. She didn't overstep any of the boundaries of our relationship, she tucked us in and even made sure we stayed warm by sharing a bed and didn't even use that as an excuse to cuddle or try to "share body heat". She deserves some positive reinforcement, Uzis are not positive reinforcement. Gentle waking, maybe even head pats. We might not be good at this, but we can at least try.

You let your stockinged feet dangle off the edge of the bed before leaning forward, holding your head in your hands. For some reason, the nightmare's not fading as quickly as the rest, taking on the kind of recall that your stalemate with Pinky had. Usually you forget the little details easily enough. You remember Pinky ripping your heart out, you remember shooting her right between the eyes. But you don't know where you were, back then. What lead to such a finish. Hell, you're not even sure what caliber and make the gun in your hand was back then, or if the firearm itself was gold in the first place.

Well, Kharn murdering you isn't as disturbing as it should be. Not as such.

It's how you let yourself go completely out of control that bothers you the most.

You lever yourself off of the bed and shuffle towards the room's privies, where a sink, a shower and a toilet is in rather pristine, if unused condition. You glance at yourself in the mirror, before reaching up to pull the entire thing aside - revealing some basic toiletries. You find a bottle of mouthwash, and you remember reading something about how the mouthwash in these parts are used by the majority of the population as surrogate alcohol when there's no vodka left to drink.

You twist the cap open and take a healthy pull from it, wincing at the strong minty taste as you gargle with the stuff. You spit it into the sink, careful to watch for any strands of crimson floating.

Nothing. So it was just a nightmare, then.

You take another pull, and this time you force it down your throat.

You manage to hold it in for a few seconds before dry-heaving over the sink, coughing the fire that seems to have suddenly filled your lungs.
